In a letter to the editor of the Rapid City Journal on Sunday, Winner resident Richard Heinz, provides a closer perspective at what he considers to be yet another root issue in the education of all youth in the school district. He wrote, "The Winner Board of Education in recent years has acted only as a figure head and placed almost all control and trust in its chief administrator and her subordinates. This administration, which is essentially homegrown, suffers from pettiness and extreme insecurity. These emotions compounded by inconsistent decisions and lack of accountability have repeatedly led to contradictions, disagreements and hardships throughout the district."

Among the settlement issues to be discussed, the district has agreed to hire a Native American ombudsman to act as a voice for the Native American families before the district. The ombudsman will come from a list of seven candidates submitted by the Winner Native community.

The Winner School District has promised that it will guarantee seats on the Principal Advisory Committees for the Winner High School and the Winner Middle School. The Native community will have to select representatives to the committee.

Winner Schools has agreed to hire an expert educational consultant to evaluate the school district. The consultant along with the Winner community, Native American families and the RST Tribal Education Department will set benchmarks that must be addressed. The benchmarks will be intended to set improved graduation rates for Lakota students, reduce racial disparities in disciplinary referrals, reduce the number of suspension, referrals, drop-outs, transfers and police referrals. Lakota history, culture and language will also be incorporated into the curriculum for all students, while the school climate will be improved for Lakota students.

The Native American families were represented in the original suit by the national ACLU and the ACLU of the Dakotas, and attorney Dana Hanna who now practices out of his Rapid City office. The Rosebud Sioux tribal council as well as the RST Tribal Education Department were cited as having assisted and facilitated the litigation efforts.

Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce celebrates 7th anniversary

KYLE - The Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce celebrated their seventh anniversary, "Creating Our Own Good Fortune,"last Friday, July 13 with a grand cook out and an inspiring message from Billy Mills, motivational speaker and Olympic 10,000 meter gold medalist.

Today the Chamber has 117 members and is located at the Lakota Trade Center in Kyle. The primary focus of the Chamber provides resources and support to businesses in and around the Pine Ridge area.

Nearly 100 people attended the festivity that was held at the Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort and Restaurant, six miles west of Kyle. The Resort and Lakota Country Tours served a delicious meal of buffalo, purchased from OSPRA, and fixings.

The dinner was held under a large tent erected just east of the motel. "It is our intent to keep as much business as possible on the reservation" said Sorbel. "We had to rent a tent from Rapid City in order to do that as we do not have a facility large enough to house a large group. We look forward to the casino being able to handle events such as this in the future so other events can be planned and keep more dollars on the reservation," he said.

Aside from the motivating speech by Billy Mills on meeting the challenges of entrepreneurship, the Chamber gave out two awards.

Rusty Puckett and Kathy Stover, of Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort, were surprised with the 'Aspiring Entrepreneur' award. Sorbel noted that when the Oglala Nation lost one of their own in Iraq and the funeral was planned for Kyle, the Resort was not yet ready to be opened but in order to provide motel accommodations for the families and for the Marine personnel attending they worked day and night to get their motel rooms ready.

The other award was a 'Kola' award given to Tanya Fiddler, executive director of the Four Bands Community Fund in Cheyenne River, for her assistance and resources provided to the Chamber. Four Bands has brought in thousands of dollars to our chamber, Sorbel said, mainly through Native Discovery, a tourism initiative between Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Cheyenne River reservations and the Prehistoric Indian Village in Mitchell. www.nativediscovery.org.

Mills spoke to the Chamber members about challenges in being an entrepreneur and the greatest challenge that is faced in a rapidly changing world is perceptions.

He said those perceptions may came in many forms. He related that point to his own past and how he faced challenges in his career and personal life.

Representatives from Rep. Stephanie Herseth-Sandlin and Sen. John Thune's office read letters of encouragement.

The drum group Cante Tinza was present to sing the honoring songs for the event.

The Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce board of directors include Sam O'Rourke, president; Kimberly Tilsen-Brave Heart, vice president; Anne Hunter, secretary; and advocate members Daphne Richards-Cook, Jo White, Howard Olsen and Mark Tilsen. Chamber staff includes Ivan Sorbel, Executive Director, Brandon Ecoffey, Workforce Coordinator and Lynette Hunter, Administrative Assistant.

For more information on the Chamber you can call 605-455-2685 or look them up on the web at www.pineridgechamber.com.

Are you Oglala or Wasicu?

By Charmaine White Face

The question was raised at a recent meeting called by Oglala Sioux Tribal President John Yellow Bird Steele about the idea of mining uranium on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, "Are you Oglala or Wasicu?"

If a person is Oglala, or Anishinabeg, or Dine, or from any other Indigenous nation that is trying desperately to retain their Indigenous values, the answer to the possibility of mining uranium is a simple and resounding "No!" The answer "yes" to the question of mining uranium reflects the values of the wasicu, or the white man, and the Lakota word wasicu literally means "takes the fat" for a reason.

All of the Indigneous nations understood what uranium was in their own terms and their own cultures. The Dine (Navajo) called it "the yellow monster." An Oglala holy man spoke of only those who had a dream and were protected could go into areas where uranium was naturally occurring. The understanding is entirely different than viewing uranium according to the wasicus as an energy source, or natural resource. Mitochondria in the cell is also a source of energy that wasicu scientists still do not understand, and their study of the cell is a lot older than the study of uranium.

John Yellow Bird Steele, as the president of one of the poorest tribes on the North American continent, is in the unenviable position of trying to improve the economic conditions on the reservation while at the same time trying to stay within the cultural, traditional values of the Oglala people. With the price of uranium soon to be reaching the $200 per pound category, and with uranium located all over the region, he called a meeting to discuss an offer made to the previous tribal president, Cecilia Fire Thunder. As the new Tribal President, he has been asked to sign a Memorandum of Agreement with the mining entity, Native American Energy Group (NAEG).

The slick handout from NAEG has a quote from Leonard Peltier on its front cover which states:

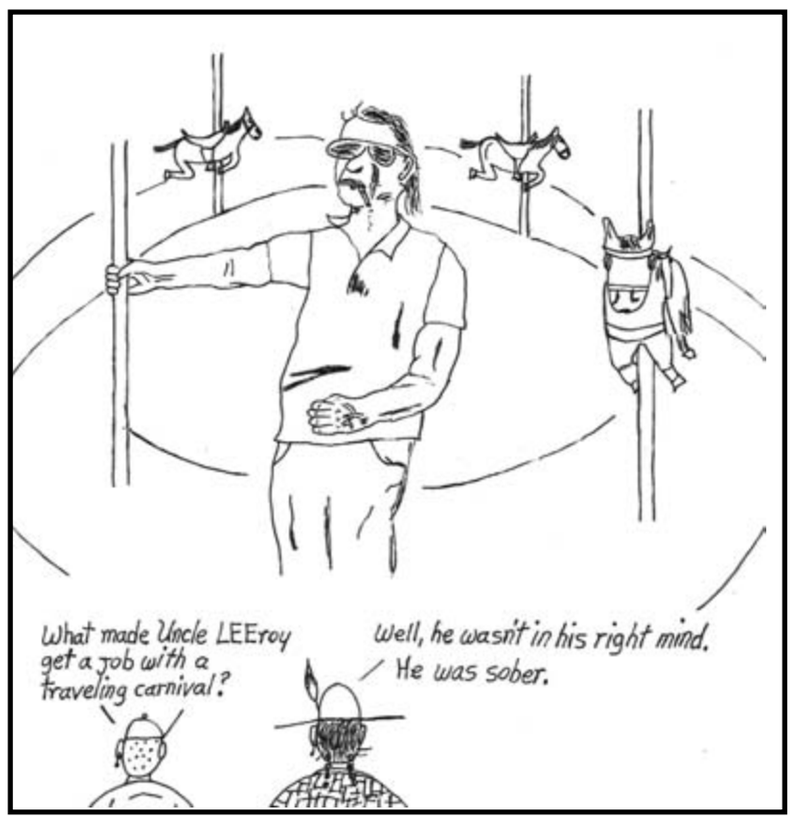
"I heard about your company and all the good things you are doing for Native Americans. Our people are good and deserve a chance to live a better life. Too many companies say they want to help, but in the end they only help themselves to our resources and give us barely enough to survive. I knew in my heart that someday a company like yours would come, a company that does not take advantage of us and truly wants to help. I heave heard about your "Tribal Empowerment Program", and I wish to be a member and supporter. My supporters and followers also pledge their complete support for your company as well."

A woman at the meeting said she was going to contact Leonard to see if he really did say these things, and to let him know what NAEG is planning for the Pine Ridge Reservation.

The handout further stated: "Native American Energy Group is an energy company that was originally founded in 2001 to develop energy resources on Native American reservations in the United States.

Upon inception, the founders of the Company initiated its current philosophy of commitment and dedication to create opportunities for an emerging group of American Indian Nations with abundant natural resources, to become producing nations which explore, produce and control their own natural resources."

Again, we have an entity planning to come into the last Oglala territory and impose their philosophy in typical colonizing fashion. If NAEG was truly cognizant of Oglala philosophy and values, they would know in the first place not to call Ina Makoce "natural resources." If they understood the vast difference in philosophy between the Oglalas and the Wasicus, they would have known better than to even try to recommend destroying and hurting her by mining.



Even more unconscionable is the idea of waving the possibility of multimillion dollars in front of tribal presidents responsible for the economic development of a reservation that is slated for poverty by design. It is not just the epitome of colonialism, but is the equivalent of the guard of this prisoner of war camp opening the gate and telling the prison leader he will be free. Upon running, the prisoner will be shot for escaping, only in this case the bullet will be the unseen, unsmelled, untasted form of nuclear radiation.

OST President John Steele is right to gather more heads together than just the OST Executive Committee, his own group of advisors, or even the entire Tribal Council when trying to decide what to do about something as dangerous as uranium mining. Along with the current tribal ban on mining on the reservation, President Steele needs to arm himself with as much information and advice as he can muster to fend off the other uranium mining companies that are sure to come knocking on the door soon.

The Task Force he established was originally called the Uranium Mining Task Force but after the presentations and discussions, concluding with the question of "Are we Oglala or Wasicu?" the group changed the name to the Natural Resources Protection Task Force. The new name fits according to wasicu philosophy and understanding. If it were totally according to Oglala understanding, there would be no need for any Task Force as we would all know that we must always protect Ina Makoce (Mother Earth) and we would never talk about mining. But the colonization and forced cultural genocide has succeeded so well that we must continue to learn all we can according to the wasicu philosophy and understanding, then discuss with each other and remind ourselves of what it is in Oglala terms and values.

The front line helping President Steele is the young, educated, and culturally aware staff that currently comprises the Oglala Sioux Tribe Environmental Protection Office and Natural Resources Regulatory Agency. If politics and corruption don't interfere and they are allowed to do their jobs, the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation may be one of the last places left in the Upper Midwest that is not completely polluted by nuclear radiation.

Finding My Voice

Alone time

Dana Badmilk

The other day I was the only one home. My kids went with to their grandma's birthday in Rushville. I was home alone for maybe 10 minutes then my aunt came to visit. But those ten minutes were so long and the house was so quiet, I almost didn't know what to do.

My grandma is moving away, well in my world she is my grandma and in your world she is my great-aunt. Her two sons lives miles away from her. I am slowly inheriting all her knick knacks, ceramic owl collection, her dishes , plants and artificial floral arrangements. She is moving in with one of her sons. When I asked her why she was moving she was "One weekend I didn't even hear my own voice, you have no idea how that is."

I didn't say anything, maybe silently cursed what may have caused her epiphany of sudden flight but I realized WOW that is lonely.

I treasure my alone time, I do. I awake early just to capture it for an hour or so I savor it before the kids wake up and total chaos breaks out in the form of fighting, nagging, and "Mom, mom, mom, mom's" invade my day. My alone time is when I write, check email, enjoy my coffee, bead, etc. In other words it is so relaxing this alone time, that it feels like paradise.

But I wonder if someday, that alone time will be convenient, too convenient. Will I come to regret it and not want to get out of bed early because of the silence I so treasure now?

I know I am still young, but that is a scary thought.

The Earth is changing

Dear Editor:

I remember back in the late 1960s when my brother Corny, I and the neighborhood boys of meadowlark hill would push tires around, because no one had bikes back then. There were no swimming pools either so we swam in stock dams around Eagle Butte. There were no foodstamps so we only seen pop maybe twice a month on Dad's paydays. Back then families had meals together and did things together as a family.

Men were the head of the family and they brought home the paycheck because they took care of their families. Most of us kids had both Mothers and Fathers as well. I can remember when we went to pow wows, it seemed like it took us all day to get to Cherry Creek or Fort Yates from Eagle Butte. People didn't dance for prize money back then, they danced because they wanted to dance.

When it rained it seemed to rain for weeks. Same way with the snow. It snowed for weeks. You do not see too many frogs, lizards, jackrabbits or coyotes now days either. Scientists say the world will run short of fresh water, food and gas and the day will become hotter than they are now in 30 years or so. And 30 years to us is like a day to GOD. Ice glaciers that are as old as the earth are melting up at Anarticia at an alarming rate, so it is already happening.

But the day the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in which the heavens shall pass with a great noise and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the Earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up. 2 Peter 3:10.

And I saw a new Heaven and a new Earth, for the first heaven, and the first Earth were passed away, and there was no more sea. Revelation 21:1.

And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all of the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come. Matthew 24:14.

Words from the 'trenches'

Pine Ridge Chamber's support

Connie Smith-Blanco

The Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce knocked a hole in one last Friday night when they held their 7th Annual Chamber Dinner at the Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort. Amanda and I both thought it was a really good idea as that is one of our favorite places to eat when we're out on the rez.

We both knew it was time to go as we haven't been as active in the Chamber as we'd like, due to our work schedules at the paper.

But this time we said "come heck or high water" we are going to be there. Even a last minute attack of cold germs didn't stop us. The Chamber's invitation was very fancy but it said the dress was casual at the affair, and we liked that right away. So there was brownie points galore before we even stepped foot under the big tent.

That's right, the "casual dress" was because everything was happening outside under a large tent and out in the fresh air.

When we drove into the parking lot we both said "is that it over there?" And sure enough, "over there" was where it was.

We looked at each other because even though the invitation said casual, we still wore "casual" skirts and blouses and high heeled sandals.

I mean we didn't know they really meant 'that casual" or we would have worn long shorts like Ivan and many other guests.

The people in shorts and tennis shoes and sandals were smiling, relaxed, and having a great time mingling and getting acquainted. The rest of us, the ones that "kind of casual," had a good time too, we were just jealous of those that followed Ivan's dress code.

I think wearing the right shorts makes you friendlier, because Ivan and his friends at the Chamber were all extra nice and made sure everyone had what they needed.

Having "what we needed" was sitting at tables decorated the way I like, not too fussy and topped with lots of nuts and candy in the center to keep smooth us over until the main course was ready.

The main course was buffalo cooked for 17 hours and it was worth the wait.

The side dishes were plentiful and the fruit was fresh and juicy but that isn't the only reason everyone was gathered together that night.

The gathering brought Chamber members together to give each other the friendly support that has sustained the group for seven years.

The board has changed hands and faces over the years and the membership has continued to grow to over 100 members and continues to accept the challenge to be the best Chamber of Commerce on the Rez. Ivan Sorbel and Kim Tilson were not shy about announcing the Chamber's achievements and future goals and that's just what the rez needs, home-grown, hard working, entrepreneurs.

Billy Mills was the scheduled speaker and his inspirational talk made every business person there sit a little taller at the table, because it isn't easy making a business work on the rez.

But if Billy could overcome the obstacles in his life and still go on to create a world record and become a star of the century, then surely we regular people could try some of that inspiration in our own daily struggles.

One of our local inspirations has been watching Rusty Puckett and Kathy Stover show the world what a dream and a lot of hard work can produce, the Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort. Ivan, before announcing them as the '2007 Entrepreneurs of the Year' told a heart warming story of their struggles over the last two years and the fact that they had been finalists for the "New Kid On The Block" award from the State of South Dakota.

It was a well deserved moment for Rusty and Kathy and shared by every member there as they showed their respect with handshakes and well wishes in the honoring line.

Songs, Inspiring words and deeds, congratulations, silent auction and door prizes. Yes, the Chamber knows how to do it proud and keep us going into the next year, here in the trenches.

Give reservations enough police

By Editorial Board
Sioux Falls Argus Leader
Published July 10, 2007

The debate over how best to encourage economic development and reduce poverty on South Dakota's Indian reservations is complicated and often arcane.

That conversation, however, is but idle chatter if there aren't enough police to fight crime.

Officials from six tribes in South Dakota recently testified during a congressional field hearing in Lower Brule that federal grants and other funding sources that help pay for police officers on the reservations has decreased, meaning there are fewer cops than there were in previous years.

This comes at a time when most of the state's nine reservations have experienced significant population growth.

In fact, reservations today have a much younger population than the rest of the state.

The prevalence of high unemployment among young people is a combination that likely requires more police, not fewer.

"Crime rates on most reservations are unacceptably high," Patrick Ragsdale, director of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, said in a statement offered at the hearing.

The Bush Administration offered a plan called the Safe Indian Communities Initiative that would have increased funding by $16 million.

Congressional leaders dealing with Indian issues rejected the plan as inadequate to meet the needs of reservation law enforcement.

What's the right amount of money? It's difficult to know, but it's clear that in South Dakota, it's trending the wrong direction.

There are probably ways to save money in the administration of the law on our reservations, and those should be considered.

But significantly cutting the number of police officers isn't the way to do it.

That kind of short-sighted thinking will only exacerbate difficult conditions and stifle efforts at long-term economic gain.

Congress and the president need to agree on a plan to put more police back on the streets in Indian Country.

My wish list

By Sandra White Shield
Special to the Times

My personnel wish list consists of the following:

*Healthcare of indigenous peoples on par with that of the non-native population of the United States

*Adequate housing for families of this reserve

*Increased funding for tribal institutions of higher education

*The ability to view beautiful teapots

Wait! That last one. That's not on MY wish list. That's on the Federal Governments wish list! It must be because Congress voted, two weeks ago, to give a $500,000 grant to establish the Teapot Museum.

This was in addition to $380,000 of North Carolina's tobacco settlement money, $25,000 from an economic development fund, $500,000 in individual contributions, and $78,000 in grants from a foundation, all earmarked for the Teapot project.

It is a well known fact that more money per capita is spent on the healthcare for federal prisoners than for Indian people.

At last the federal government has recognized the critical need for housing by offering 200 mobile units, unused by hurricane victims to people of the Rosebud and Pine Ridge Reserves. Or could it be that they just don't have a place to store the units?

Funding to insure continued higher education for reservation students has been cut, while operating costs skyrocket.

Sparta, North Carolina, the proposed home of the Teapot Museum, is six miles from any main travel route and has a population of 1,773. Officials of the town and proponents of the museum have "hopes" that the museum will spur development in the town but acknowledge that there is no track record for a positive result. The museum is ultimately to cost $10 million to build and provide as many as 12 jobs.

The funds allocated for the museum come from monies set aside each year by Congress for "earmarks." North Carolina's legislative representatives claim that they are just getting their share of that money for their constituents.

There was $29 billion in "pork" monies in 2006. That is $29 BILLION dollars. Contained in the list of things this money was used for were race-car research, a Cattle Congress, and teapot museums.

It seems to me that the United States priority in monetary spending has become just a tad lop-sided. Where are the representatives of this state when such money is voted on? Why they are on the side of the Teapot Museum!

They voted for it! Granted this appropriation was a rider on another bill but no legislator should vote for any bill when such riders are attached.

Our legislator's neglect of securing such funds for the indigenous peoples of this state is unconscionable. Accountability for their action and inaction is in order.

Northern Perspectives

Lila okate eyas Lakota ki iyokpi yuhapi

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

It is hot out, but Lakota people are having fun anyway. I have to admire Lakota people as the summer months appear to be getting just a bit hotter, but it has not deterred anyone from having fun, while also attending to their spiritual needs.

I was fortunate to spend a couple of hours at leksi Roy Stone's newly relocated sun dance grounds over the weekend and it was good. The weather was perfect and I sensed the commitment and prayers of the dancers, some of whom I know.

I am not qualified to say much else about the sacred sun dance as I usually find that I can only take 2-3 hours of the heat and then I have to head home.

I usually do a good job of keeping hydrated and I hope that others are too. I am looking forward to other sun dances, at Hollow Horn Bear's, Crow Dog's and even kola Homer White Lance's sun dance.

Later this weekend, I spent a couple of more hours in the hot sun at the Antelope powwow while attending the honoring and namegiving of Brandon Whitebird, the son of Francis and Alice Whitebird who is returning to Germany and then, deploying to Iraq.

I thought it was important to be there and quietly show my support as kola Francis was kind enough to come to my son Beaux's namegiving ceremony a month ago. Lakol ocaje wan kupi ca he wopila heca. Cin'ca hoksila Beaux ki 'ta wicahpi ake topa' eciyapi.' As a dad, I fully understood the pride that Francis must have felt for Brandon.

I took Beaux to White River; also, over the weekend to watch the Bull-A-Rama and that was kind of fun because he had never seen bull riding.

I think the bulls probably won 10-2 or something like that but it was an enjoyable experience for us anyway. Pte bloka ki pte ole wicasa ki ota tehki kuyapi eyas oyukpi unyuhapi.

With the heat index reaching into the one hundred degree level this week, it will be important for people to continue to keep hydrated and to stay in a cool place.

I have said it before, but Lakota people are very good about surviving such extreme temperature, as we rarely hear of anyone suffering from heat stroke.

The fire danger will likely be quite extreme and there isn't much we can do about that, except maybe be supportive of our firefighters if they have to go out for any extended length of time.

So, there is much more fun to be had with the annual Oglala Nation powwow and Rosebud Fair coming up next month. Despite the heat, summer time is always a special time for Lakota people as we can make new friends, enjoy the fellowship of others and continue to enjoy a way of life that has characterized the social and spiritual realm of Lakota people for centuries.

The courage and fortitude of Lakota singers and dancers tested

Dear Editor:

The fourth of July weekend did not turn out as expected for a small number of Oglala Sioux tribal members in Lame Deer, Montana. Some young dancers and a well-respected Oglala drum traveled to the Kenneth Bear Tusk Memorial Powwow on July 6, 7, and 8, 2007 to compete and to enjoy.

Two singers for the Sons of the Oglala drum, Ronald Cross Dog and Sheldon Two Crow, and some young teenaged dancers, Devin Cross Dog, Isaiah Weasel Bear, Justin Williams, and Novie Runs Above, have been traveling the powwow circuit in Indian country. This one, however, turned out somewhat difficult and disturbing for them.

Nineteen forty-two (1942) saw the birth of a singing group, the Oglala Juniors. Later, one of the singers had formed another group - Sons of the Oglala. The memories of Matthew and Nellie Two Bulls are very much a part of the drum today. Some of the older Northern Cheyenne in Lame Deer recognized and honored the drum, as did other drum groups.

The trouble began almost immediately when powwow announcer, Vincent Black Bird, openly expressed his displeasure with the counter-clockwise dancing of the Lakota dancers. He publicly chastised them, "You Oglalas come here, you should dance the Northern Cheyenne way. Respect our ways."

Ronald Cross Dog said it took every ounce of patience just to keep dancing and to keep the younger dancers in good spirits, "They were scared by what they were hearing from the announcer over his public address system." Some of the people seemed to be in agreement with their announcer as they began whispering to each other and pointing at the Lakota dancers.

An older Arena Director then tried to get the younger dancers to dance clockwise by physically grabbing one by the arm and turning her around.

Novie Runs Above later told the older dancers Cross Dog and Two Crow, about what the man did and said to her. She was apparently intimidated, according to Mr. Cross Dog and it upset him.

It did not stop there as the announcer continued publicly berating the dancers by accusing them of bringing the thunder by dancing the wrong way during one of their ceremonies. It rained on the second day of the powwow. The man explained that the ceremony performed here as done to support the sacred Arrow Ceremony in Oklahoma.

Finally, Cross Dog confronted the gentlemen. He explained that they came a long way to enjoy their powwow and that they should have informed the Lakota dancers ahead of time, and they would have complied with any requests. Lakota people are very respectful of these ways, he said. There was mixed reaction among the Northern Cheyenne.

Meanwhile, the powwow announcer abruptly disqualified all the Lakota dancers as contestants for the prize money. This was a bit too much to handle, even for a long time singer, dancer, and sundancer like Cross Dog. He and the others angrily left the arena and broke camp.

As the group was leaving, Cross Dog realized that what they were doing was not good.

He returned to the arena, approached the announcer and the other person and offered to apologize for behaving the way he did in front of the Northern Cheyenne people. To this, the arrogant announcer replied, "It's good that you do that. You should apologize to me for disrespecting the Northern Cheyenne way."

A younger Arena Director and the powwow committee chairman came forth and apologized to Cross Dog. They said their announcer had no authority to disqualify any dancers. Another lady committee member stated that she is the authority on who is disqualified and has not disqualified anyone.

The men emphatically apologized for the announcer's behavior. They said the man did the ceremonies on his own. Such ceremonies are performed in private not in public. A female Tribal Council Representative explained that their ceremonies are so sacred, even the tribal offices are closed, "that's how sacred they are." She stated the Tribal Council will look into this.

Cross Dog, again responded with, "No one should be apologizing for one man's misconduct. He should be apologizing for disrespecting Lakota people. He picked on us all weekend. Actually, miscommunication and his discourtesy are the problem, but it made the whole tribe look bad. Someone should have told us ahead of time."

A smiling Northern Cheyenne spiritual person then asked Cross Dog, "What is it you want? Do you want a blanket dance? Is it money you want?" Cross Dog responded with, "It is not a matter of money. It is of communication." A tribal headsman then chimed in, "Everything is clearly spelled out in the rules - to respect Northern Cheyenne ways."

Cross Dog repeated himself, "You should have told us ahead of time, not publicly humiliate us. It may have been funny and awkward, but we would have complied. I, for one am a respectful person. I get the feeling this man has a personal vendetta against Lakota people, nothing else. He was unnecessarily rude and harsh with his language and behavior."

"At home," he explained, "there is a reason we don't perform sacred ceremonies in public. There are bad thoughts, women on their monthly moon, fighting, drinking. We do a humble prayer and that's all. We keep our ceremonies at home."

A powwow committee member asked Cross Dog to dress up and finish dancing. He, again, explained, "We have been dishonored; our feathers have been dirtied. We will have to take them to a ceremony to cleanse them. The younger dancers are so embarrassed that they may even put their feathers away for a long time."

The spiritual person then offered to shake hands with Cross Dog using his right hand at first then, as if remembering something, quickly switched hands and began shaking hands with his left hand. "I don't what that was about but it doesn't really matter now", Cross Dog said.

A Northern Cheyenne family approached Cross Dog and invited them back for next year's powwow. They explained that they would like for them to come back because of the traditional songs that the Sons of the Oglala drum is known for. One of the family members said, "All we have here are melody songs."

Cross Dog was on his way to another powwow at Prairie Island, home of the Mdewakanton Dakota in Minnesota. Apparently, he was still upset as he described his feelings about the incident. "For the past thirteen weekends we have traveled all over the country. Never have we been so disrespected. It was the ugliest and the meanest way to be disrespected."

Deja vue, indeed: the evolving story of FEMA's toxic trailers

By Stephanie M. Schwartz
Freelance Writer
SilvrDrach@Gmail.com

In June of 2007, Senator Tim Johnson, FEMA, Congress, and the BIA arranged for 2,000 FEMA trailers to be made available to the Native American reservations in dire need of housing.

These trailers are part of the 8,000+ excess, unused FEMA trailers constructed for the victims of the 2005 Hurricane Katrina. Exactly which American Indian reservations and how many units each reservation will get remains yet to be decided.

The tribes will be required to pay transportation costs as well as the costs to prepare the lots, set the trailers up, and to winterize them. However, clearly this appeared to be a significant help towards the critical need of about 90,000 American Indian families in critical in need of adequate housing (as detailed in a 2003 study by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights).

According to public statements, Senator Johnson specifically envisioned many of these trailers going to the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, a place whose poverty-stricken conditions are likened to third world countries. The Senator and the BIA have been working closely with John Steele, Paul Iron Cloud, and the Tribal Council from Pine Ridge to make it all happen.

It seemed a surprisingly ideal solution, one which many people applauded at first as a huge humanitarian and logical move by the Federal Government.

Ideal, that is, until one starts to investigate the history of these mobile homes and learns of an astonishing toxicity issue with the vast majority of the units.

Said to be fully-furnished, three bedroom units, these trailers were built during a construction frenzy created by FEMA's unprepared but immediate need to house Hurricane Katrina survivors. A report from the Sun Herald News in Mississippi in May of 2006 details the picture of this manufacturing frenzy.... untrained workers, a dearth of suitable materials, using materials possibly made outside the U.S. which contained higher levels of chemicals than normally allowed, and low quality control on hastily-created assembly lines.

Chemicals… therein lies the problem. The Government's public announcements about these trailers fail to mention the history of toxic contamination from formaldehyde which has been proven to exist in the FEMA trailers and mobile homes constructed for the victims of Katrina.

Formaldehyde is a chemical which emits gasses which the EPA considers to be highly toxic and carcinogenic (known to cause lung, nose, and throat cancer) but which is not regulated for trailer manufacturing in this country. According to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, exposure to formaldehyde toxins can create irritated eyes, breathing problems, headaches, asthma attacks, coughing, congestive heart disease, nausea, depression, memory-impairment, skin rashes, respiratory problems and even can lead to cancer. To compound the problem, high temperatures or high humidity increase the toxin levels.

Worse, for people who already are compromised with respiratory health issues, and for infants, children, nursing mothers, and elders, exposure can prove disastrous and even more deadly.

Formaldehyde is used in cheap building materials like particle board, plywood, curtains, molded plastics, counter tops, glue, carpet, insulation, and wallpaper. While normal trailers and mobile homes also contain these toxins, the FEMA trailers and mobile homes, hurriedly built as bare-bones cheap models, seem to contain significantly higher concentrations.

In 2006, the Sierra Club tested FEMA trailers in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama and found 83-94 percent of them to contain formaldehyde levels far above EPA and OSHA recommended workplace limits of 0.10 parts per million. Other testing has shown comparable results. Varying reports state that the gas levels emitted by the formaldehyde in the contaminated trailers ranged from 3 to 1,000 times the acceptable EPA limits.

Originally, FEMA's response to hundreds of complaints from Katrina victims was that the toxic vapors go away with adequate ventilation after about six months. However, continued testing has proven that not to be the case.

Additionally, according to a report given by journalist Dan Rather on HD-TV, information has come to light that FEMA was informed of the high toxicity by OSHA (Occupational Safety and Health Administration) just two months after Katrina hit, in October 2005, but chose to ignore the information. Testing to ensure employee safety, OSHA found new units in four county FEMA staging areas to have toxicity levels 20 times above government standards just in the air outside the trailers.

Dan Rather further related his interview with a former FEMA employee who clearly indicated that not only was FEMA aware of the toxic problems but chose to ignore them.

Moreover, the employee stated that FEMA advised their employees to remain silent about the test results.

In March of 2007, the Washington Post News reported FEMA's woes in trying to sell their excess trailers and mobile homes. Selling the units at 40 cents on the dollar seemed like simple poor financial management on the part of FEMA in this report.

However, in light of the contamination issues, it may have turned out to be the best financial move FEMA could have made.

In May, 2007, both ABC News and CBS News reported that Louisiana Dem. Senator Mary Landrieu and Louisiana Rep. Congressman Bobby Jindal have each independently called for hearings to address the FEMA trailer toxicity issues and FEMA's poor response as well as to what it knew, how much it knew, and when.

In June, 2007, the Louisiana Advocate News reported that a class-action lawsuit had been filed in Baton Rouge, Louisiana Federal Court which claims that "hundreds of thousands" of people in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama may have been exposed to dangerously high concentrations of carcinogenic formaldehyde fumes with no recourse or viable solution provided by FEMA.

According to a report in the Washington Post on July 13, 2007, Desiree Collins of Louisiana filed the original lawsuit regarding the contamination of the FEMA trailers. She allowed her lawsuit to become a class-action lawsuit for all Katrina survivors who are victims of the toxic exposure.

Obviously, it seems tragic enough that well over 75-85,000 families, victims of Hurricane Katrina, still have to remain trapped into living in their FEMA units two years after the fact, a home most likely contaminated and dangerous. That, in itself, defies anyone's definition of humanitarian aid.

Yet since June of 2007, with South Dakota Dem. Senator Tim Johnson leading Congress into approval, tribal councils are working hand in hand with the Federal BIA (Bureau of Indian Affairs) to bring 2,000 of these very same trailers to the reservations of South Dakota as well as to other reservations.

Again, all under the guise of humanitarian aid.

Deja vue, indeed. We have been here before.

The seeming-correlation of the distribution of toxic trailers to the reservations in 2007 and the government dispersing smallpox-infested blankets to the reservations in the 1800s is not so far-fetched at all. It just leaves one wondering…..

Red Cloud knocks off White River in preview of 2007 Lakota Nation tourney

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

RAPID CITY - After four pool games and three tournament games, it was White River against Red Cloud for the South Dakota Tech high school boy's basketball team camp championship Sunday night at the King Center on the Tech campus; Red Cloud won a hard fought battle 64-60.

In the first Tech team camp last month, White River downed St. Thomas More for the camp championship. More is coming off back to back state championships and White River has been to the State B tourney the last two years finishing fourth in 2006 and third in 2007.

A total of 40 teams from six states participated in the two day weekend team camp.

The top division included 14 teams, Sidney from Montana, Laramie and Gillette from Wyoming, Williston, Mandan and Belcourt from North Dakota and Rapid City Stevens, RC Central, Platte, White River, St. Thomas More and Red Cloud from South Dakota. The lower varsity division included Bayard, Hay Springs and Crawford of Nebraska, Longmont I and Longmont II of Colorado and Tiospaye Topa, Stanley County, Lead-Deadwood, McCook Central and Hill City of South Dakota. There was a junior varsity division with 12 teams and a junior high division with four teams.

Louie Krogman, a senior getting ready for his last year of high school, led White River through the tournament, helping his team to a 20 point win over St. Thomas More in the semis and knocking down 28 points in the championship game against Red Cloud. Krogman is 173 points from breaking the all time high school individual scoring record in South Dakota, he has averaged over 30 points a game the last two years for White River.

"Krogman is the real deal, he shoots from anywhere on the floor and he has a great ability to create space with any defenders covering him," said Matt Rama, Red Cloud head coach, "Eldon Marshall has done a good job building a team around Krogman, it is no longer a one man show, we really look forward to playing them next year in the Lakota Nation."

Red Cloud's Christian McGhee led the Crusaders in the championship game with 17 points while Lester Gotheridge scored 13 and grabbed 14 rebounds. Red Cloud beat Gillette, Sidney and Laramie in pool play and beat RC Stevens and Sidney in the first two rounds of the tournament and knocked off Platte 69-25 in the semis. Billy Scott had the task of covering Krogman all night long; Red Cloud's team also included Dave Giago, Mike Twiss, Art Vitalis, Ezra Zephier, Mike Cuny, Carl Swallow and Brier Iron Cloud.

Red Cloud is now 40-5 for the summer season and wraps up their summer with participation in the Powerhouse National Tournament in Washington D. C. the last weekend of July.

Red Cloud's junior varsity lost to Mandan in the JV Division championship game.

Pine Ridge Village celebrates July 4

PINE RIDGE - The Pine Ridge Village held their annual fireworks display on July 4 as planned.

It should be noted that this event was not held in the past three years but under the chairmanship of Bette Goings, the cookout and fireworks display was enjoyed by many.

People attending ate hot dogs, baked beans, chips and cold drinks were served at the Yo Park. The fireworks display were contracted out to Dean's fireworks.

The following is a list of people of people and businesses the Pine Ridge Village would like to thank for contributing to the successful endeavor:

Patty and Bat Pourier, C&R Drive Inn, Chad Brunsch, Jumping Eagles, Sioux Nation Shopping Center, Pine Ridge Cable, Yellowbird's Gas, Shangreau's Fireworks, Taco Johns, Pizza Hut, Arrowhead Foods, Wakinyantanka Fireworks, Arrowhead Inn, Co Twiss and family, Pioneer Service and PTI.

A special thanks to Collins Gay and Robin Tapio for all the footwork they did and to Margaret Vitalis for the delicious baked beans and to Nikki Big Crow and Gloria Yellow Boy for helping serve the people.

A community survey is available at the CAP office on how to better meet the people's needs.

Radiation warning signs placed on Cheyenne River

RED SHIRT VILLAGE - Some of the residents of Red Shirt village on the northwest corner of the Pine Ridge Reservation will be unveiling signs warning people of the high nuclear radiation levels found in the Cheyenne River.

Residents of the tiny community of Red Shirt on the south side of the Cheyenne River occupy a village site that is thousands of years old to the Oglala Tetuwan (Sioux) people.

Many have lived here all of their lives, growing gardens with water taken from the Cheyenne River and fishing for catfish, bass, and turtles. In the summer months, the River is used for swimming and other recreational pursuits.

Several weeks ago, in preparation for the summer months, Everitt Poor Thunder asked Defenders of the Black Hills, an environmental organization, whether the Cheyenne River water could be used to irrigate a community garden. A local well could not be used as it was found to be radioactive and warning signs surround that structure.

A water sample was taken, sent to a laboratory, and the results were found to be above the Environmental Protection Agency's Maximum Contaminant Level for alpha radiation.

As alpha radiation causes harm when ingested, the warning signs are being placed to warn people of the dangers of nuclear radiation in the water. The was July 18 on the south side of the bridge spanning the river.

Red Shirt village is located about 25 miles southeast of Hermosa on SD Highway 40.

Shigellosis cases increasing, high in Huges, Todd counties

PIERRE - The Department of Health is reminding parents to protect their children from shigellosis, a common bacterial infection that increases in the summer.

Shigellosis is spread by eating or drinking contaminated food or water or by direct contact with an infected person. Kids in day care are at higher risk due to their frequent hand to mouth contact. People exposed to shigella may have mild or severe diarrhea or may show no symptoms at all.

"The single most important way to prevent the spread of shigellosis is to practice careful and thorough hand-washing after using the toilet," said Josh Clayton, Surveillance Coordinator for the Department of Health.

Shigellosis symptoms may appear one to seven days after exposure but typically within two or three days. While most people recover on their own, others may require fluids to prevent dehydration. Children and staff in day care, food handlers, and health care workers should be excluded from their duties until they have two negative stool cultures.

Through July 16, the department had reported 81 cases of the disease in nine counties, with 54 of those cases occurring in Hughes County. Other cases were reported in Dewey (2), Lawrence (3), Minnehaha (3), Pennington (2), Roberts (1), Shannon (4), Stanley (5) and Todd (7) Counties. In 2006, South Dakota reported a total of 396 cases.

TCSD Public Relations

MISSION - Melissa Whipple-Riley and Charles Moe Sr. were sworn into office at the July 9 TCSD Organizational Board Meeting. The two won seats on the board in the June 19 election.

Reelected to the board as president and vice-president, respectively, were Marlon Leneaugh and Troy Heinert.

After lengthy discussion, the board approved the Todd County High School Emergency Crisis Plan as submitted. The document is a guide for school personnel to follow in case of any emergency, such as a bomb threat, intruder, fire, tornado, etc.

Whipple-Riley said she has a problem with relinquishing "total control" to police, when parents will look to the school district for answers regarding the students. She was assured that law enforcement must be in charge in such incidents.

"I don't have a problem with the police taking over," Vice-Pres. Heinert said. "They are trained, and I would much rather have a professional in charge."

Moe agreed. "We have no choice," he said. "They have the training and the fire power."

High School Prin. Vicki Sherman said the police keep her informed at all times. "We work with them," she said. "I dial 911, they send the officers and they determine what happens from there.

South Elementary Secretary Monica Rahn said each school has an issue, that South, for instance, needs to know what is going on at the high school. She said she feels each school should have a safety officer who

OLC's science field project involved 23 junior high students
Environmental topic focus of summer institute

KYLE - Things have really been jumping at the Pejuta Haka College Center these last few weeks. Oglala Lakota College's new Native Science Field Center project 1st Annual Summer Institute was launched.

And 23 junior high students from Rapid City, Red Shirt Table, Pine Ridge, Kyle Porcupine, Allen and Martin were involved in the institute, which dealt with topics in leadership training, western science and Lakota culture.

Each of the six weeks focused on different environmental topics; the weeks' topics included geology, the Black Hills, water, animals and plants.

The students went on different field trips each week. Aspects of Lakota culture were introduced in each of these areas as well as hands-on scientific labs. For example, during animal week, students learned how to make papa (dried meat) and then after informative instruction from the Oglala Lakota Nation's Parks and Recreation set traps to help study the fox population on the reservation.

The week ended with a field trip to Reptile Gardens where they went on a scavenger hunt developed by OLC's interns.

Deloris Bear Killer shows the NSFC students the correct way to cut meat to make dried meat.

The participants practiced and learned about Lakota culture daily.

Each day started with a prayer. The students were divided into a tiwahe (family).

All of the families made up the tiospaye. They learned about significant Lakota plants/medicines from Wilmer Mesteth, OLC faculty. Respect was shown to all the places they went; they took trash bags and picked up trash at the sites of instruction.

One community service project performed was weeding a community garden in Martin. The institute culminated with a luncheon for the parents and an overnight field trip to Pierre, where they performed hands-on science experiments at the Science Discovery Center. The next day they learned about water treaty rights and Mni Wiconi. Francis Ferguson and John Brave graciously gave the students an in depth tour and informative lecture about the water project.

The program stressed healthy body, healthy mind, healthy Unci Maka (grandmother earth). Daily snacks included fruits and vegetables, nuts, trail mix and jerky. No pop or candy was allowed in the institute; water bottles were provided to the students.

Without the support of the parents, grandparents and guardians, programs of this nature are not successful; the parents/guardians are to be applauded for their help by getting their children up every morning. This shows that the family structure exists; that is a key component for a healthy mind and body and ultimately a healthy Earth.

Community is a focus for this program.

The following community members saw the value of this program and provided support, Kyle Grocery provided all the lunch materials for the six field trips, Dr. John Zimmer gave money for healthy snacks, Ace Hardware in Martin, Bair Ford in Martin and L & D Swett Bar. The Native Science Field Center at Oglala Lakota College is funded by Hopa Institute, Bush Foundation and National Science Foundation. Plans for next year include an ongoing after school program in the schools, monthly Board meetings and another summer institute. Call Rhonda Bear (Director) at 605-455-6004 or Misty Brave (Principal Investigator) at 605-685-6002 for more information.

knows what to to, where to go, no matter what the emergency. "Whatever it is, you can't wait," she said.

Whipple-Riley thought it would be a "great idea" to have safety officers at each school and Heinert said he wouldn't have a problem with a person at each facility to relay information, as to where people could meet to get information, etc. "Maybe there needs to be a document for administrators, a check list for them to notify cops, teachers," he said.

Sherman said a lot was learned last year during a couple of incidents at the high school. "We are going to be a lot stricter if it happens again," she said. "All student computers will be shut down, cell phones will be off." She noted that a training session has been scheduled for August 16 on emergency issues. "We will let you know more after that," she said.

Board Member Lavern Lanz noted that in an incident at a Rapid City school, a cell phone proved to be very useful. "If a teacher has a cell phone, it could be quite beneficial. I don't agree with the 'no cell phone' rule," he said.

Board members agreed that the Emergency Crisis document is "just a start," and that the issue must be revisited.

Although the board voted to adopt the current educational philosophy statement (Statements of Belief and Mission Statement), it was agreed that it needs to be changed.

"Because it is so lengthy, it has lost a lot of its punch, and people just don't read it," Supt. Dr. Margo Heinert said. "It would be good to get some new ideas , have new people involved to revise it. We have to look at our restructuring, and that will determine some of the Mission and Belief Statements."

Moe noted that the statements need to be short and concise enough for people to know what it is.

Leneaugh said it needs to start with Dr. Heinert and the administrators.

In other organizational meeting business, the board:

*designated Lakota Country Times as the official newspaper for the district;

*named Paul Jensen, Winner, as attorney for the district;

*designated Wells Fargo Bank and USB PaineWebber as the official depositories;

*appointed Dr. Heinert as authorized representative of TCSD for all applications and agreements needed;

*established regular board meeting dates (see elsewhere in this issue);

*appointed Business Manager Chad Blotsky as custodian of all accounts;

*designated Robert's Rules of Order as parliamentary procedure;

*voted to join Associated School Boards of SD, National School Board Assn., Impact Schools of SD and National Assn. of Federally Impacted Schools, SD High School Activities Assn., National Indian Impacted Schools Assn., National Indian School Board Assn., SD Coalition of schools.

*authorized the superintendent to close school under emergency conditions and established a chain of command in her absence - Director of Exceptional Education Debera Lucas, North Elem. Prin. Pat Burnette, TCMS Prin. Peggy Diekhoff; *set board member compensation at $75 per meeting and $30 for committee meetings lasting less than three hours;

*set admission charges for the 2007-08 school year at $4 for single adults, $3 for single student, $45 for season adults and $35 for season students;

Gov. Rounds addresses Gear Up students
State Indian Education Act on pilot mode

RAPID CITY-South Dakota's recently enacted Indian Education Act may appear to be an unfunded mandate, but 2007 state legislators might have rejected the act if funding had been a component of the bill, Governor Mike Rounds told a group of about 120 American Indian students at the Dahl Arts Center on Thursday, July 12.

Along with Keith Moore, secretary of Indian Education, and Roger Campbell, director of the Office of Tribal Government Relations, Rounds spoke to students involved in Gear-Up, a nationwide program held locally at South Dakota School of Mines and Technology to encourage students to study science, engineering, and math.

Before approving funding for a program, the legislature wants to see results, Rounds said, so he has chosen to use discretionary funds to support a pilot language program at St. Joseph's School.

St. Joseph's is a Catholic boarding school for American Indian students at Chamberlain. The act requires a pilot program for language revitalization, with a status report to be presented to the 2008 legislature.

If the language program is proven to be a success at St. Joseph's, then the legislature can be approached to fund a more comprehensive program, Rounds said.

The new act establishes the Office of Indian Education within the Department of Education, a move that creates greater security for the office, Moore told students. Prior to passage of the act, the program existed at the whim of whoever occupied the governor's office, he said.

Under requirements of the act, Moore's office is responsible for developing a curriculum to instruct teachers and both Native and non-Native students in Indian history, language, culture, and traditional educational theory.

The act also establishes an advisory council, with members representing all South Dakota tribes and Native educators from across the state.

Moore said Indian education will be infused into existing curricula, with results determined by assessment testing.

"All great things start small, and we build on it," Moore said. "You could say this act is an unfunded mandate … or say 'What a neat step South Dakota has taken.'"

A panel of upcoming high school sophomores - Laree Pourier, Red Cloud High School; Zachary Boyd, Evan Heintz, and Nina Schmidt, Rapid City Central High School; and Nellie Two Elk, Todd County High School - asked questions they had prepared in advance.

In response, the three officeholders from Pierre gave a consistent message: stay in school, graduate, and get post-secondary education.

The workforce in South Dakota is diminishing, while the Native population is growing faster than any other group in the state, creating a promising situation for Native people to find jobs, Moore said.

Campbell said employees will be needed for government functions such as public policymaking, teaching, road construction, social services, and public protection.

Healthcare on and off the reservations "could use a lot of help," he said.

In the private sector, there's a "clear demand" for people skilled in finances, science, technology, engineering, math, and computer science, Campbell said.

Moore added that technology is growing so rapidly, the top 10 jobs 10 years from now do not currently exist.

The forum was videotaped by KOLC TV at Oglala Lakota College for future broadcast and was one of a series of KOLC programs concerning Native issues hosted by The Dahl.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

This year has been full of losses for me and I learned a lot about myself this year. I have been recently questioning the direction I should be going in.

I don't know whether my employment is the path I should stay on or my education is a better path for me. I guess the reason why I am torn is because I don't want my kids to be dragged all over the place for me to attain the education I would prefer. They love our home and I do too.

I just don't know where I am going once again in life. Also I have other questions about my life but I don't know if I am ready for those to be answered yet.

Well I've heard great things about you and would like to meet you sometime.

I will end here, thanks for your time.

Just wondering

Dear Just Wondering:

Sometimes it is in the timing. I do see you continuing your education. Here is a thought for you: If we continually teach our children that change is something to fear, that we are worried about their skills to adapt, then we handicap them in their personal growth.

I see that your children, unless you teach them that moving might upset them, will be fine with moving while you continue your education. I also see, that after this continuance, you will move back to the area you now live in.

You will teach your children flexibility and expose them to new environments and new people. This is not harmful - it is expansive. I have some very successful friends that have done the same thing I see you doing, and they and their children are all doing well, and are back at home, fully educated and successful in their chosen careers.

Dear Anna,

Hello Again, Anna. How have you been? Well I am really confused with my personal life and I don't know what is going on with me.

I am in or I was in a relationship that was like the Rocky Mountains and now that he is gone I don't know if I want him back or what. It is that I really need some advice in what to do and do you see my life making any changes?

Always Dazed and Confused in the City

Dear Dazed and Confused:

If you have to ask someone if you want him back then you don't. Your life will change when you make changes in your approach to living.

I see you deciding to obtain some more education.

There seems to be a delay before you can work that out, but it will certainly help you to create a better life.

By the way, you are not a victim of your life, you are a creator of it. Wake up, enjoy every moment you breath, be thankful for good health, follow your dreams and quit expecting some poor man to fulfill your life. Life fulfillment is internal, not external and no man can nor should try to complete your dreams, your life, or even who you are; but he should join you in yours and you in his.

You haven't met him yet, and your true love won't come until you finally accept responsibility for who you are, how you live, and what you do. It's not them, honey. It's you.

I see you successfully working in a dental environment. It just takes time, education, stamina and an incredible amount of guts to work in people's mouths. Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

I had a few questions. One is my kid's father in love with his ex? The kid she says is his is it really his because he's telling me it isn't.

Also there is his cousin who is really a trouble maker what did I ever do to get her mad at me and get into my business. Is there some way you can help this girl?

This Girl

Dear This Girl:

No, your kids' father is not in love with his ex. What insecurity within your relationship with him makes you think that? Do you not feel loved enough? Remember, everyone over twelve who is not with someone has a past. The key word here is PAST. It happened. It's not over.

It looks to me that your kids' father is the dad of the woman in his past. He knows in his heart that he could be, so I would like to ask men why, when they take a poke at a woman, and she takes it seriously (so to speak), then why do they stand in denial? What's up with that?

As far as his cousin goes. I don't fully understand why she is "after" you. I think it is based on gossip from your boyfriend's ex. Whatever it is based on she is not being graceful, and is showing herself up to be a woman with really bad manners.

Pretty soon, she won't have a lot of friends because she is so judgmental. She doesn't understand that she is capable and has the power within herself to still be friends with his ex and you at the same time. It is okay to like both of you.

Just try and be okay with her. When she says something mean try asking her very quietly why she feels compelled to hurt your feelings? That is a healthier response than getting huffy and mean right back. Give her a few years to mature, and I'll be willing to bet that she will be okay with you. Got the time?

Please, for your own sake, either learn to be okay within your relationship or leave. Your insecurity and doubt is torturing your boyfriend and making yourself miserable - that is not a true representation of love, but it is a true representation of dysfunction.

Get well, get happy, and grow in love. There is an old saying I want you to consider:Doubt is the devil's wedge.

That simply means: doubt and fear will always create chaos. Work on your mind, not his.

8th Year of Severe Drought Conditions on Pine Ridge Reservation

Our department would like to remind the Oyate of the Pine Ridge Reservation that we are entering our 8th year of drought conditions. The weather has been kind lately, but we know it will heat up very quickly and every drop of water is precious.

Be Water-Wise Outdoors

- Try watering lawns in the early morning or late afternoon to prevent evaporation and scorching of the grass during mid-day sun.
- Try not to water on windy days
- Try using drip irrigation for your lawns. Saves 75% more water than s prinklers by limiting evaporation.
- Over-watering can cause fungus to form brown patches on lawns.
- Water lawns and shrubs once every five days to promote longer stronger roots.
- When mowing try keeping grass 3 inches long to help in moisture absorption.
- Keep swimming pools covered to stop debris and to help prevent evaporation.
- Try backwashing your swimming pool's filter weekly to help keep the water clean.
- Clean feet before entering pool.
- Make sure all livestock watering devices have an adequate float system that does not leak.
- Report all yard hydrant and thermo-line leaks to proper authorities.

Be Water-Wise Indoors

- Report all leaking bathroom and kitchen fixtures.
- When washing clothes use the right water setting for the load.
- Listen for toilet constantly running or filling when not in use (a leaky toilet can account for up to 1400 gallons of water lost per day, while the average household uses only 350 gallons per day.)
- A leaking toilet can cause your septic system to back up because of over saturation.
- Try using low flow toilets (1.5 to 2 gallons per flush), old toilets use up to 5 gallons per flush.
- Don't use your toilet as a garbage disposal.
- Turn off water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing dishes.
- Take fast showers instead of baths.
- Use low flow fixtures in baths and kitchens.
- An Ultra low flow showerhead uses 1.5 gallons per minute, while conventional showerheads can use up to 5 gallons per minute.

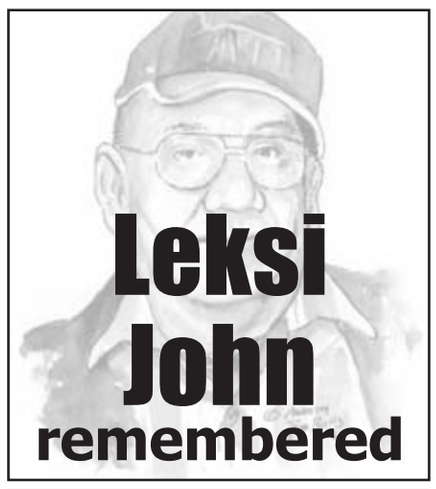
Rosebud Comprehensive Healthcare Facility



Attention Veterans

The IHS operates a comprehensive health service delivery system for approximately 1.6 million members of federally recognized American Indian and Alaska Native tribes. If you are veteran currently utilizing Indian Health Services you will not be denied care provided directly at the facility. However, not all care can be provided here and you may require a referral to a non-IHS hospital. This care, when authorized, is paid for through the Contract Health Services (CHS) program administered by the IHS. At this time, only services that are considered a Priority I are eligible for referral. A Priority I, by definition, is an emergency service necessary to prevent the immediate death or serious impairment of the health of an individual.

Due to scarce resources, IHS requires you to apply for alternate resources, allowing the facility to provide services to a greater number of individuals. CHS is the Payor of Last Resort. This simply means that if other resources are available and assessable, it is mandatory that you apply and utilize the resource. Examples of alternate resources include Medicare, Medicaid, Veterans Healthcare, CHAMPUS, private insurance, workmen's compensation etc. If alternate resources are not approved, the alternate resource denial letter needs to be brought into the CHS Office for records.

The goal of the Indian Health Service and the Department of Veterans Affairs is to use the strengths and expertise of both organizations to deliver quality health care services and enhance the health status of American Indian and Alaska Native veterans. Please direct questions or concerns regarding eligibility to the Contract Health Services program at (605) 747-3239. If you would like assistance in the application process, call (605) 747-2313 to speak to an IHS Patient Benefit Coordinator. The Rosebud Sioux Tribe Veterans Affairs Program is also available to help with this process and discuss the advantages of utilizing VA Healthcare systems.

Fire danger high, public warned to be careful

PINE RIDGE/ROSEBUD - In the Pine Ridge area, the fire index has been reported to be extreme, which means any spark is most likely to ignite a fire. The highest fire index is six, said Daigre Douville, fire management officer for the Pine Ridge BIA fire station, and currently that is what the area has been calculated at.

He said since July 13, there has been an average of 55 wildfires in the area. The temperatures for the past week have been above 100 degrees.

The National Weather Service reports the temperatures will drop to the 90s this coming week.

South Dakota has been in drought conditions, with the western half of Shannon County getting less moisture for the year.

Rosebud BIA Fire Management Officer, Dana Cook, offered a comparison between 1988 and 2007 at this same time of the year and with fire burning more acreage back then, he was able to attribute the difference to a number of reasons.

In 1988 there were 188 fires that burned 19,482 acres compared to 2007 when 141 fires burned 73.4 acres of grass. Cook said that in addition to the moisture and greener conditions, that perhaps it was due to better response time, better training and perhaps weather conditions.

During the 4th of July holiday between June 25 and July 8 the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services reported a total of 92 fires, many due to fireworks.

Cook also provided year-to-date statistics on the Rosebud reservation that revealed that there have been 141 human caused fires, while lightning caused only one which burned less than an acre of land.

There is a lot of dry lightning to contend with as well as haying machinery and Cook recommends that people stay out of tall dry grass as their exhaust pipes can cause a fire. He also cautions the community to have a water hose handy if burning trash. He also asks people to call the police department to notify them if they are going to build a fire for a sweat lodge. This will also cut down on unnecessary and premature calls because someone might have seen an open fire.

Any spark, whether it is from lightening, fireworks or a match is highly likely to ignite a fire. Once a fire starts, there is a high potential for it to spread quickly. Wildfires are easier to extinguish when they are small, report wildfires before they grow. Protect your home by keeping the grass mowed short and fuels away from your home.

South Dakota wildland fire coordinator Joe Lowe said the 2007 fire season could be one of the worst fire seasons on record for the state. The dry conditions now look like they do in late August or September.

The fire season ends in mid October.

Ethics accusation made against Bordeaux over land deal, council hearing July 30

ROSEBUD (AP) - Rosebud Sioux Tribe President Rodney Bordeaux faces possible suspension or removal from office if he is found guilty of ethics violations by the tribal council for his participation in a controversial $1 million tribal land purchase.

Opponents claim Bordeaux misused tribal funds and violated the tribal constitution and bylaws by purchasing 800 acres in southwest Todd County without approval from the tribal council.

Critics also say Bordeaux paid an inflated price compared to appraisals of neighboring land.

Bordeaux insists he did nothing wrong, saying the Tribal Land Enterprise, of which he is a director, approved the purchase.

He said that after the council denied two requests to mortgage other tribal property to pay for the purchase, he found other tribal funds with which to buy the Zibell Ranch.

Former RST President Charlie Colombe said Bordeaux actually asked for permission to buy the land, not for a mortgage. Colombe said Bordeaux was required to ask tribal council permission to buy the land even with the Tribal Land Enterprise's support.

After TLE won the land at auction, Bordeaux paid $100,000 in earnest money from the tribe for the land. He said he then went to the tribal council to get the mortgage for the other $900,000.

Bordeaux

Tribal council member Cyril Scott said he never heard Bordeaux ask for permission to take out a mortgage, but that instead, Bordeaux asked for permission to buy the land.

The council voted down the request twice, but Bordeaux went through with the purchase anyway, Scott said.

``He went against the council directive. That's the moral of the story," Scott said.

Colombe said Bordeaux committed a second offense when he spent the earnest money without authorization.

Bordeaux said he does not need the board's approval to buy land but would need its permission to borrow money or take out a mortgage. He said the TLE makes the final decisions about land purchases. The TLE approved the Zibell Ranch purchase.

However, Colombe said, the TLE is a subsidiary entity of the tribal council, and its decisions must be approved by the council.

Webster Two Hawk Sr. filed petitions against Bordeaux and also against Fern Bordeaux and Michael Boltz. They are tribal council members and relatives of Bordeaux who supported the purchase.

Two Hawk said the amount that the TLE agreed to pay for the land is more than $700,000 above what locally appraised property is selling for.

The TLE agreed to a price of $1,250 per acre. Two Hawk wrote in his complaint that the Bureau of Indian Affairs has appraised neighboring properties at slightly more than $300 per acre.

Colombe said that last summer, he bought comparable land only six miles from the Zibell Ranch for $275 per acre.

O'Bryan makes transition from Red Cloud to USD

Hard work, good support system help young students succeed

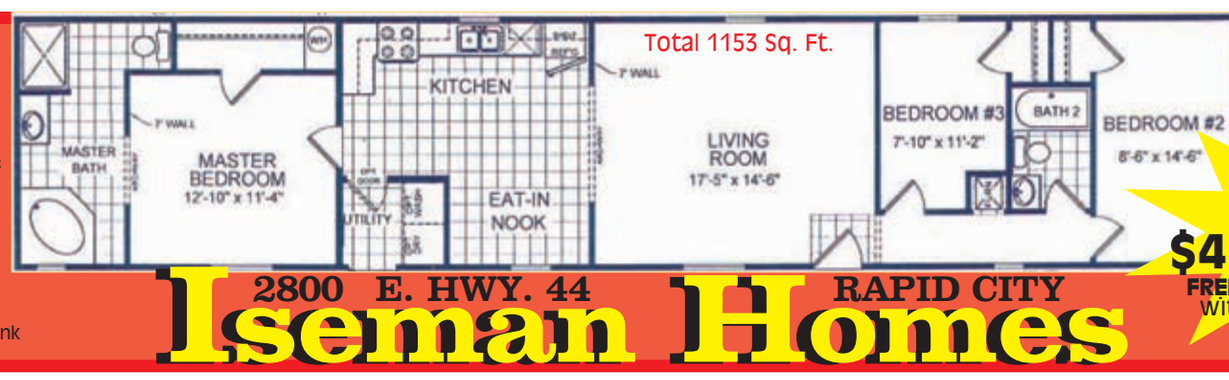
By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

VERMILLION - "You know, I was really terrified to have people read my essays, I always wondered how my work measured up to other students and I worried that I wasn't academically prepared," said Marissa O'Bryan, the valedictorian of her senior class at Red Cloud high school last year and now preparing for her second year at the University of South Dakota in Vermillion, "and on the athletic side, I was really nervous, USD had a strong track team and I knew the competition would be tough, I knew there would be really hard workouts and I felt like I was going into a dark tunnel, I didn't know anyone who had run in college, there were just so many unknowns, it was really scary."

"The first year is really tough," said Matt Rama, Red Cloud's head cross country, boy's basketball and track coach, "it is a difficult transition for any kid to go from high school to college, in high school you are the best in your school and when you go to college you are with a lot of other students who were the best in their school; Marissa is making the transition, she'll be successful because of her strong work ethic."

Marissa O'Bryan talks of her transition from high school to mainstream college.

O'Bryan credits hard work as an important part of the transition, at Red Cloud her overall GPA was between 4.0 and 4.1 but USD was a whole new ballgame. The first semester taking 13 hours, Marissa earned a 2.7 and the second semester with 12 hours she earned a 3.5 and participating in a sport at the collegiate level requires a whole lot more work according to O'Bryan who said strongly, I was trying my hardest, you can only do so much.



"Time management is a big factor," said O'Bryan, "we took an NCAA class where we had to fill out time sheets about what you were going to do every hour of the day; all of it took practice as you basically learned how to study, how to turn off the computer and we had help, the athletic program had tutors and they helped us by correcting our papers, helped us with math and critiqued our speeches and we had study halls in the library, six hours a week - if it wasn't for that I may have never made it to the library and slowly the tests got better and better and you figured it out."

In high school, O'Bryan played volleyball, basketball and ran track. In her senior year, head track coach, Matt Rama encouraged Marissa to focus on the sprints, the 100 and 200 and even the 400, a new race for O'Bryan who had run hurdles her first three years in track and a relay. With the new focus on the sprints and spending time on technique and form, O'Bryan was able to reach a personal best almost every week. Qualifying for state for the fourth year in a row, O'Bryan was last in the 100 at the State track meet as a junior and third as a senior and added a fourth in the 200.

"There's no other feeling in the world like crossing that finish line," said O'Bryan, "I love track, the competing, the butterflies when you get into the box, you drive all those miles

Enterprise executive, said an appraisal by the TLE's in-house appraiser found the land to be worth about $800 per acre.

Bordeaux said a maximum amount for a TLE bid was not set and that the mortgage was not asked for before the auction because the tribal council could not convene a quorum at the meetings before the auction.

He said the purchase price increased because the TLE got caught in a bidding war with a millionaire from New Mexico. He said the land is valuable because it could be used for pheasant hunting and because the Keya Paha River flows through it.

``It's valuable land, and when you're at auction, you can't really stay at the appraised price,'' Bordeaux said. ``It was a high cost, and when you are in a bidding process against millionaires, it depends on how much you want the land.''

Bordeaux said the purpose of the purchase is to reclaim former tribal land to return the reservation back to its size before South Dakota's statehood.

``We are just trying to restore our land base,'' he said.

Opponents say they agree with Bordeaux's plans to increase the size of tribal land but are angry that he went ahead without the council's approval.

``It was a clear violation. When tribal council says no, no means no,'' said Todd Fast Horse, former executive secretary and chief of staff for Colombe.

In June, shareholders of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe met to vote on the proposed land deal. Individual members of the tribe who own shares voted in favor of buying the land, but the tribal council, which controls the shares that are owned by the tribe itself, outvoted the individual members and opted not to buy the land.

Bordeaux proceeded with the purchase by using other tribal funds.

``It's already purchased,'' he said. ``It's a done deal.''

Bordeaux said he is not worried about what will happen at a July 30 hearing because he went before the ethics commission, which cleared him of the charges but also sent the issue to the tribal council for another hearing.

``The ethics commission didn't find any wrongdoing on my part, so I feel vindicated by them,'' he said.

The ethics commission sent a letter to the tribal council in May saying the council should decide the matter because it was a constitutional issue, not an ethical issue.

Bordeaux said the tribal council has little or no power to censure or remove him in this case. He also said he believes they will agree with the ethics commission.

However, Fast Horse and Two Hawk both said that the tribal council has the right to censure or suspend Bordeaux from office.

Fast Horse said the tribal constitution and bylaws state that a council member or president who is found guilty of misconduct in tribal affairs can be removed from office and be barred from running for office again.

Two Hawk said he hopes the council will suspend Bordeaux without pay for the remainder of his term in office.

Tribal council member Scott voted against the land deal both times it came to the council but said he will withhold judgment until the hearing.

``There hasn't been a verdict, and there hasn't been a judgment,'' he said. ``I am to uphold the constitution, and I will do so if we find a violation of our constitution.''

Robert Moore is a tribal council member and a TLE director who voted against the purchase in the two previous council votes. He refused to comment on possible sanctions against Bordeaux.

``It's important that whatever the council hears that we hear everything objectively and fairly and we look at the merits of our constitution and how the tribe and the tribal council and elected leaders uphold their duties of office,'' he said.

Bordeaux, who has been president for two years, is facing re-election this October. He said those who have made the allegations are bitter about a political defeat in 2005 and are eager to have him removed from office.

``This is an ongoing effort on their behalf. They just aren't happy they were defeated,'' Bordeaux said.

The ethics violation hearing has been set for Monday, July 30 before the RST council having been referred from the tribe's ethic commission which apparently cleared President Bordeaux of any wrong doing earlier.

Metcalf offers platform for office of RST vice-president

TWO STRIKE - Ned Metcalf, 54, has lived in the Two Strike community all of his life and after having served as an Rosebud Sioux Tribal council representative in past years, this time he has decided to run for the office of RST vice-president. He has four grown children and lives with his mate, Marianne Brave and said that several elders representing a cross section of Rosebud communities asked him to run for office.

Ned Metcalf

Metcalf said, "I accepted the request because the office of vice-president has always been a full-blood with traditional roots. A good example was Adam Bordeaux who was vice-president. The elders can see that in me and say that my Lakota name will be 'Wacantognaka Wicasa" in the future and they want to be apart of the inauguration."

One of Metcalf's campaign priorities is economic development and returning to 'grass roots' where it all started. He entered into politics just short of his 18th birthday when Chief Eagle Feather nominated him for the community chairman of Two Strike where he served unopposed for four terms. Leo Chase In Timber seconded the nomination. His grandparents were Charlie Metcalf and Julia Sees Red.

He was on the RST tribal council between the years 1992 to 1998. He credits his uncles and grandparents for their teaching, including Frank Picket Pen, Carl Iron Shell, Sr. Gilbert Black Bear, Paul Cloudman, Charlie Turning Bear, his father Richard Metcalf and late brother, Verdell Metcalf who also served as an RST council representative for 22 years.

Helping to get the tribal ranch operational, as well as increasing the rate for burial insurance from $300 to $1,000 and assisting in putting together the grazing ordinance are some of the initiatives that Metcalf takes credit for.

His other priorities include healthcare, law enforcement, housing, alcohol treatment, healthcare and Sinte Gleska University. He said, "One of our down falls is that there are no more volunteers. Everything is money. 'Hecun tehki unkunpi.' He cited other Lakota words including 'wouonihanpi, uncikilapi, wacantoganaka and waunsilapi" as values to follow.

Finally, Metcalf noted that he has always been involved in veteran honorings as his uncle was Phillip Stands. His father served in Korea, while brother Verdell served in South Vietnam. Later on in the summer, he will assist in several honorings in Milk's Camp community.

to a meet and you go up against tough competition. If it wasn't for Matt, he volunteered to work with me, it was the little things though, workouts in the morning, work on abs, motivation to win state and more importantly he helped me with my confidence, making it a reality that I could compete at the highest level."

In her first year at USD, Marissa ran the 60, 100, 200 and 4 X 400 relay during the indoor season and the 100, 200, 4 X 100, 4 X 200, 4 X 400 and the 200 in the medley relay. The women's team at USD was the North Central Conference outdoor conference champs this year. The university has decided to move up to NCAA Division I and after one more year in the NCC, USD track teams will have the opportunity to be the first athletic teams from USD to compete at the Division I level.

"When USD's coach, Lucky Huber, said he would be very happy to have me as part of the track program, I was so excited," said O'Bryan, "he was very enthusiastic and made the workouts not so bad; if you are a hard worker, there's always the next person who'll push you farther, you can never work hard enough, your body will go as far as you push it. It was a fun experience and it is great to have teammates around you who are supportive and positive, cheering you on for the last 200 meters. Track is very individual but they make it a team deal and I wouldn't have been able to do it without my teammates being so encouraging - the workouts are really hard, to push your body past your fatigue, to pump your arms as hard as you can, get light headed, feel like you are going to fall down but when you are done, you feel good, you feel pride that you did it, it is a really good feeling."

This coming school year, coach Huber at USD says Marissa will run the 400, both the 4 X 400 relay and the open 400 and in the indoor season some 500s to get prepared for the outdoor season.

"When Rama first encouraged me to run the 400 in addition to the 100 and 200 during my senior year, I really wasn't comfortable with it and when I ended up being ranked in the top ten in Class A in the 400 I would go around hiding the newspaper from Matt, he didn't need that kind of encouragement," said O'Bryan, "but now after a year at USD, my coach will do his best to prepare me, I just have to be dedicated and put in the hard work and on top of that, I have some great role models on my team, some awesome runners."

Looking back on her first year in college track, O'Bryan said it was the mental toughness that was the most important element of what she learned; its all mental in what you do. Yes Coach Huber will give us workouts so we know when the hard workouts are coming and we know to eat a good meal and get enough sleep but I can be the fastest runner but if I don't have the mental toughness, I won't get there.

Next year when USD starts competing at the NCAA Division I level, O'Bryan will represent the second student athlete from Red Cloud in the last five years to be competing at the DI level. Mackenzie Casey, a 2004 Red Cloud graduate is entering his senior year at South Dakota State University and has played basketball for the Jackrabbits all four years. Student athletes from Red Cloud participating at other levels include Johnny Crow who went to McCook Community College in Nebraska on a basketball scholarship last year, Raymond Ghost Bear who played golf at Si Tanka University and Dakota Wesleyan University and Chris Red Bear who is planning to go to Central Community College in Columbus, Nebraska this fall.

O'Bryan and Casey in particular but also all of the student athletes who go on and do a sport in college represent potential role models for the many young athletes on Pine Ridge and throughout Indian Country.

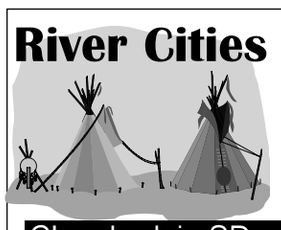
"That's the goal for athletes to be able to compete at the next level," said Rama, "it's just good to see kids from the res, get off the reservation and be successful, Marissa and Mackenzie both have a really good work ethic and that's been a key to their success."

O'Bryan is majoring in nursing, she plans to be a neo-natal nurse practitioner; I don't want to be a doctor, I want to care not cure, she says with a strong emphasis. As far as advice for those younger students thinking about college, O'Bryan tells younger students to follow their dreams, don't wait for your junior or senior year, you have to take care of your academics, your grade point average starts when you are a freshman but if you have determination you can do it she emphasizes.

"Don't wait until the last minute, colleges are not waiting until the spring of your senior year; call and get in touch with college coaches, send them tapes, go for it, follow your dreams," said O'Bryan, "put your mind to it, be dedicated and focused, there are many people out there who will help you reach your goals.

"USD was her choice and it has turned out to be a good choice for my daughter," said Todd O'Bryan, Marissa's father and a long time rancher outside of Sharps and a long time member of the Shannon County School board, "I'm glad she's in school in a small town like Vermillion rather than a large city and Marissa going out for sports made her first year harder but by participating in track she is part of a family, all of the sprinters are there for her and help her."

"The University was a perfect fit, my teammates are awesome, the campus and classrooms are not too big and I'm far enough away from home to be independent," said Marissa, "the year wasn't without challenges though, you sometimes end up stressed and really tired, during the conference meet, we had finals, it was really hard to balance them both - there were times you would come back late from a track meet, you're tired and certainly don't feel like studying for a test the next day and you have to learn to adapt, some teachers may not teach the way you learn and you just have to figure it out."



Marissa continues to think of ways to let younger students know how best to prepare for college, you could look at all the campuses and see the best facilities or a really nice student center but it comes down to the people and definitely to the people you surround yourself with. She tells students looking at a college education to take a trip to the college during the school year, stay overnight with a student and really check it out.

"Marissa works really hard, that helps and students who have a good foundation in math and English seem to do well," said Huber, "her work in high school helped earn O'Bryan the Gates scholarship and a USD Native American scholarship, both meant she did not have to work during the school year and she could focus on her classes and running track."

She also knows that a lot of people have helped her along the way including Wendell Gehman, her science teacher at Red Cloud who helped to make science fun and interesting, her parents who raised her with enough discipline that today she is responsible enough to handle many things herself, her old coach, Matt Rama who believed in her and pushed her to succeed and have the confidence to meet the many challenges ahead of her and her new coach who helped push her to new limits and new levels.

Todd County School board approves student support, intervention development

By Phyllis Littau
Todd County School Public Relations

MISSION - At its July 23 meeting, the Todd Country School District Board of Education approved the development of an Office of Student Support and Intervention.

Dr. Margo Heinert, superintendent, said that recognizing that the school district has a number of students identified as being "at risk," she felt the office was needed. It will combine all of the programs geared to serve these students into one department and will require minimal additional staff.

"The plan includes utilizing staff and programs already in place and having them under one director to assume the integration and alignment of programs," she said. "This would include coordinating the juvenile detention center curriculum and coursework to align with TCSD, assign high school counselors to one grade level and follow students through their entire four years of high school, and more effectively utilize the available technology."

"Right now," she added, "it seems like its loose-ended-lots of little programs with different rules in each building, too much of the right hand not knowing what the left hand is doing."

Programs and personnel included in this office will be: guidance and counseling, social workers, attendance intervention team, JDC, alternative schools, home school liaisons, and school resource officers. Programs and personnel from outside agencies working closely with this office will be: gang task force, Boy Scouts of America and after school programs.

The district will advertise for a director for this office, and additional counselors, social workers, home-school liaisons, truancy, etc., may be hired, so all buildings will be served.

Peggy Diekhoff, middle school principal, said she feels this position is definitely needed, as currently there are three different alternative schools, but all with different functions.

"We definitely need someone to coordinate, give those programs some direction," she said.

Pat LeBeau will be assuming the duties of director of maintenance and transportation. LeBeau brings with him over 16 years of experience with Indian Health Service Environmental Engineering, and 10 years with Rosebud Housing Authority.

Lyle Iron Horn was introduced and welcomed as the new assistant principal at the high school. He has a bachelors from Black Hills State University and a masters from Oglala Lakota College. Lavern Lanz, board member, voiced the hope that Mr. Iron Horn can offer improvements in the area of discipline at the facility.

Chad Blotsky, business manager, gave the preliminary budget report for the 2007-08 school year. The final budget hearing will be held in September.

Beginning next month, reports will be given by administrators and program directors at board meetings. Reporting at the second Monday of the month will be North, Middle School, High School, He Dog, Federal Programs, Exceptional Ed and Rosebud. On the fourth Monday agenda will be South/Littleburg/Lakeview/Klein/Okreek, Distance Learning, Curriculum/School Improvement/Assessment, Spring Creek, Maintenance and Transportation and Office of Student Support/Intervention.

Another new agenda item, "Board Discussion," gives school board members the opportunity to voice concerns:

Lanz said he dislikes the appearance of the high school area, with weeds, etc.

Dr. Heinert said she is waiting for LeBeau to get on board.

"If kids see a nice, clean place, they know we care about it and it will send the right message to them," she said.

"I see a lot things we do for negative behavior, at-risk students," said Melissa Whipple-Riley. "But what about those who do well? Do we just say they did well and sit them on a shelf? I know Peggy (Diekhoff) does a good job of acknowledging their accomplishments, but then they leave middle school and go to the high school and there is nothing.

Dr. Heinert said she will send a note to the administrators.

"I have been through a heck of a year-applying for college, scholarships," said Charlie Moe. "I have Charlie Jr. Squared away now. After he was registered, the first thing he had to do was go to the bookstore and register for books. That's what they use in college. We do everything online here, so right off the bat, he was at a disadvantage. We try here, but I don't think TCSD prepares these kids for college.

"Other terms unfamiliar to him are mid-terms and finals," he continued. "When do TC students have these? Because of No Child Left Behind, or whatever, they don't have them. They also don't know how to take proper notes. If we think we are preparing them for college we have our head in the clouds. We prepare them for graduation from Todd County High School, but not for college."

"They need textbooks to study for exams," he added. "Frankly, I'm a little ashamed of myself. Maybe we need to change the way we prepare our students. That's my personal experience, anyway, and I think we could do a heck of a better job."

Lanz said he believes the Todd County system does well.

"I have four children who graduated here," he said, "Yes, they had problems, but part of that responsibility is ours too. They can get the education here, but our system is not set up thinking all students will go off to college. We are probably lucky if 20 percent go. I do think we give them the opportunity, although we can improve. I agree with having textbooks though."

Marlon Leneaugh, board president, said a personnel audit is being considered for the district-someone to come in and see if the district is under or over staffed.

"Maybe it is better to have less staff and pay better wages," Dr. Heinert said. "Some of the bigger districts have fewer employees. Maybe we need to sit back and take a long look at it."

"Everyone has a job description," Lanz said. "If you have a job, sometimes you do things that are not in that description. For instance, if you are a custodian at the high school, and you see weeds on the campus, you should go out and take care of it. But sometimes people believe because it isn't spelled out exactly in their job description, it doesn't apply to them."

Dr. Heinert said the district is now in level three of restructuring, as required by No Child Left Behind, and administrators and Leneaugh met with the Department of Education regarding what the district is required to do.

"The department will use teacher incentive money to work with us," she said.

The next board meeting will be Monday Aug. 13, 5:30 p.m. at the curriculum center, Mission.

Remembering Leksi John

By Richard Iron Cloud
Special to the Times

How do you write a memorial about Leksi John Around Him?

He was a Lakota wicasa, who lived in a difficult time in Lakota history,

Leksi John is with his family, friends and relatives in (Nagiyata) the spirit world, he is almost certainly joking in Lakota, laughing about something humorous

For me most importantly Leksi John was a mentor of mine, anytime I had a question about a Lakota word or one of many things that I didn't understand about the Lakota culture Leksi would always take the time to share his wisdom with me and for this, I am forever grateful

He was a Vietnam Veteran. And very proud to be a part of the Lakota Akicita Society.

He was a powerful orator, who always felt more, comfortable speaking Lakota than English. To me he was the epitome of what it means to be Lakota Wicasa Ikceka. (Common Man)

There are, in all probability people, who are more fitting to write this than I, but I felt compelled to write this memorial so I will do the best that I can, Leksi John always encouraged us to do the best that we could.

Leksi John had his own brand,

His Lakota name was, Wacinyanpi

(Dependable or someone who is always depended on)

And this he was, you could depend on Leksi John to always talk Lakota,

You could always depend on Leksi to always put the Lakota ways first and foremost.

You could always depend on him to find humor in any situation .

You could always depend on Leksi to sing the appropriate song for any occasion.

You could usually find him at a Wacipi, standing up or dancing in the crow's nest, making announcements in Lakota then in English, he would always explain the Lakota protocol and culture and why we do things a certain way.

You could always depend on him, to make you feel like you were the most important person in the world.

I could always depend on him to say "you and I are closely related".

I was told once by another mentor of mine, that to be a Lakota leader, "Igluiyanpo" be prepared, when you go to a gathering always be prepared to do a speech, prayer or sing a song.

You could depend on Leksi John to do all of these things and do them extremely well.

This Oglala Nation Fair, Porcupine Fair or Kyle Fair, I will be waiting to hear Leksi John say

Hokahey Hel Iyapo,

But he will not be there, I will have to depend on my memories of him and thank Tunkashila for putting Lakota men like Leksi John in my life.

Wopila Tanka Eciciyapelo.

Notes From Indian Country

Two volumes of Indian heroes and legends

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)
© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

I suppose it can be said of all minorities that we have our own heroes. Most Native Americans can find a bone to pick with this Nation's acclaimed and widely accepted heroes. Even an Abraham Lincoln comes up short in Indian country. After all, he was the president of the United States that signed the order to execute 38 Indian freedom fighters in Mankato, Minnesota in the 1860s. It was the largest mass hanging in the history of America.

I followed a career in journalism because of the example set for me by two of my own heroes. The first was a Fort McDowell Apache man named Carlos Montezuma. His Indian name was Wassaja. He began publishing a small newspaper in Arizona in the early 1900s that took on the bureaucratic establishment that had been the bane of Indian rights. His forthright and fearless criticism of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and of the Department of the Interior made him an instant enemy of the federal government.

He was so admired by my other hero, Rupert Costo, a Cahuilla Indian, that Rupert started the first national Indian newspaper in San Francisco and he named it Wassaja, after Montezuma. I became an advocate of Costo's after reading his hard-hitting editorials in Wassaja, and finally, after going to work for him where he became my teacher and friend.

I could fill the pages of a book with the many Indian heroes I have come to admire over the years, people like Wilma Mankiller, the first woman leader of the Cherokee Nation, Charlene Teters, the Spokane Indian lady who helped bring down the mascot of the University of Illinois, Chief Illiniwek, after nearly 20 years of trying, Roger Jourdain, now deceased, the former leader of the Red Lake Band of Ojibwe, a man who risked everything in his fight to bring equal rights to the Indian people, Elijah Whirlwind Horse, the Oglala leader who helped bring peace and harmony back to the Pine Ridge Reservation after the turbulent years of the early 1970s, Leo Vocu, former executive director of the National Congress of American Indians, Vine DeLoria, the great Native author and teacher, and Lionel Bordeaux, the Sicangu man who helped build Sinte Gleska University on the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota and I could go on and on.

But one of my other heroes, a man I have known for more than 30 years, Dr. Dean Chavers, saved me all of the work and troubles by pointing out the names and histories of nearly 100 of his Indian heroes. His brand new set of books titled, "Modern American Indian Leaders, Their Lives and Their Works, re-acquainted me with so many of the Indian people I have known and loved over the many years I have been a journalist in Indian country.

It took Dr. Chavers two volumes to include the names of so many Indian heroes he has met or read about over his more than 40 years of serving Indian country. His books cover a gamut of Indian leaders from sports figures like Jim Thorpe and Billy Mills, to holders of the Medal of Honor like Corporal Mitchell Red Cloud, Jr., Winnebago and Colonel Gregory "Pappy" Boyington, leader of the famed Black Sheep Squadron at Guadalcanal, a member of the Coeur d' Alene Tribe of Idaho.

Like Dr. Chavers, I have been around so long in Indian country that reading his two volumes of Indian heroes was like setting down and visiting with so many of my old friends, many now deceased. There were no greater heroes to me than people like the Honorable Reuben Snake, the great Winnebago spiritual leader, or Leslie Marmon Silko, Laguna, the wonderful author of such great books as Ceremony and The Man to Send Rain Clouds, or Simon J. Ortiz, the great poet from the Pueblo of Acoma, and the veteran journalist Richard LaCourse of the Yakama Nation now deceased.

And like Chavers, I was also a devoted admirer of Louise Erdrich, Ojibwe, the author of so many books like Love Medicine, Four Souls, The Beet Queen, and The Antelope Wife and Dr. N. Scott Momaday, Kiowa, the winner of the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction in 1969 for his book "House Made of Dawn."

Dr. Dean Chavers is the Director of Catching the Dream, a national scholarship and school improvement program based in Albuquerque, NM. He has been involved in Indian education for 35 years and is past president of Bacone College in Oklahoma. If you want a well-researched book that includes the names and histories of so many modern Indian authors, journalists, tribal leaders, sports figures and political activists, these books do it all.

It was an honor for me to be included in his books of Modern American Indian Leaders. The two-volume set was published by Edwin Mellen Press, Box 450, Lewiston, New York, 14092-0450 and can be accessed at www.mellenpress.com.

Finding My Voice

Summer memories

Dana Badmilk

One of the best things about moving home are the memories it brings back. There are certain things I see, hear, or even smell everyday that reminds me of growing up on the rez. (not burning trash!)

Like the big chokecherry tree in my backyard. I remember eating them till my mouth went numb and I couldn't taste anything else. I remember grinding them for a hunka grandma to make patties, wasna, and wojapi.

Timpsilas. Last month took my kids digging for them out on my dad's land.

My grandma went digging with us, which was a good thing because I was trying to dig up some other plant that was not timpsilas. I forgot what they looked like. We walked all over but didn't find too much. Actually we found 8 of them and we all shared them. My kids could not believe how good they tasted. I think my dad felt bad that we only found 8. On his next trip into town, he brought me a braid of timpsilas, 3 fishing poles, and two puppies, who escaped kettle dance sentencing. (I won't even mention that in that same week, he gave my brother a Harley Davidson.) Not that I would RIDE a Harley, I loved the fishing poles, timpsilas, and puppies.

I remember the days when I was a child and we fished at Denby or East Dam, swam at East Dam, walked the hills for timpsilas, buffalo berries, and chokecherries.

I remember eating wasna to my little hearts content. Why do those days seem so far away. Maybe they are.

Now I know it is my job to keep some of the memories alive and going for my children.

Maybe someday they will write about how their mom thought she knew what timpsilas were and dug up a sticker plant instead. Ah...the summer memories we have and create on the rez.

Dana Badmilk is a 35 year old self employed artist who recently moved back to the Pine Ridge Reservation. She lives there with her husband and four children. She can be read at her blog here http://danasvoice.blogspot.com.

Northern Perspectives

Language is about committment

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

There is a lot to do in the way of Lakota language preservation. On the Rosebud one of our stated goals is to increase the number of Lakota speakers in the community by 10 percent and I have built a strategy to do that.

Obviously there are a lot of local entities and individuals who are also undertaking the challenging task of perpetuating our beautiful Lakota language. I have noted a number of times that a lot of entities are failing to measure up to their stated outcomes of creating Lakota speakers and, yet, they continue to make that claim.

As I work at some beginning start up activities I realize that my skills are two pronged and which I have built over the course of a lifetime. I chose to return to my homeland on the Rosebud where I want cinca hoskila, Beaux, to know the basic foundations of Lakota life. We're doing that everyday and life in the slow lane is good. Ever so often I question if life on the "rez" has been the best way to utilize my experience and education and most of the time it comes up affirmative.

I slowly learned the rudiments of Lakota speech, sounds, reading and writing by listening to grandmother, Charlotte Hawkins of Allen. My parents, Ben and Victoria (Ironshooter) spoke Lakota regularly to each other. Most of the time, they didn't speak directly to us, but we became familiar with basic Lakota and learned what we could. That's the way with learning Lakota; for each of us it is an individual learning experience.

My two pronged skills at work include that of possessing a very good Ivy League education which I will never apologize for and having learned Lakota in a functional manner.

I have come across some wonderful Lakota speakers and when I come away I take something from that exchange whether negative or positive. The one thing we don't like to hear when people try to learn the language is to have someone ridicule them or victimize them. Jesse Bear at Allstop will occasionally tease me about some wrong pronunciation and he means it and I take it that way and learn from it.

Kola, Roy Spotted War Bonnett, kola Francis Whitebird and even tahansi Ned will invariably speak Lakota to me and they don't care that I have a French name. I don't think they would even mind if I spoke "broken" Lakota.

Please turn to Language: A5

Language committment

We sometimes refer to someone speaking "broken" English, so there must be those of us who speak "broken" Lakota, by the same reasoning.

Anyway, the rationale for explaining my facility in the Lakota is that I attended a meeting and I came away kind of feeling defensive. Someone apparently said that my position required a fluent speaker and I only claim to be functionally fluent.

As an educator and someone who is comfortable with writing Lakota and doing commercials in Lakota on KINI, I don't want to find myself in a defensive mode every time I attend a meeting.

Next time, if I need to demonstrate my ability in Lakota, then let's all stand up and do the similarly. Many people have heard my commercials and as recent as Friday I received a nice compliment from Vine Goodshield who said he used to work with my father and appreciated my work. Also, another elder, Mr. Elk Looks Back is also so very nice in expressing his compliments for my reading and writing Lakota. Francis and Pat Bad Hand said that at least someone is trying.

We're at a time in Lakota history that everyone needs to contribute to saving the language. It doesn't matter who we are, it's not about us individually, it's about undertaking a major project that will help to keep our language alive.

Anyway, if anyone wants to have a private exchange in Lakota, it would be an honor for me. Let's honor each other and in the process maybe we can learn something from each other instead of putting each other in a defensive mode. The need to preserve our language will be here long after many of have maka si'na kiye and in the meantime, let's know what our roles are.

The young people are watching us and language preservation isn't about skin color, physical attractiveness or being highly educated, but rather a commitment that comes from the heart and the head, as Phil Two Eagle told me last week.

Kola, Francis, said he once heard a tribal member complain about language loss years ago and he said, "What are you doing about it?" and the gentleman could not respond.

Two Elk convicted of abusing toddler

PIERRE (AP) - After more than three hours of deliberation, a federal jury in Pierre convicted a Rosebud man of sexually abusing a toddler.

Pascal Two Elk, 27, was found guilty Thursday on two counts of aggravated sexual abuse of a child under the age of 12. He faces a maximum penalty of life in prison when he is sentenced later.

The U.S. attorney said the charges involve the rape of a 2-year-old on the Rosebud Indian Reservation in October 2005.

Court upholds manslaughter conviction

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) -A federal appeals court upheld the conviction and sentence of Donovan New for a car accident that killed two people on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

A jury in March 2006 convicted New, 37, of Oglala, on two counts of involuntary manslaughter. A judge sentenced him to 144 months in federal prison.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals rejected New's arguments that he should have been given his Miranda rights when questioned in a hospital, and that the jury should not have been told of his prior convictions for driving under the influence. The court also upheld the sentence as reasonable.

Two passengers died in the single-car accident in June 2005.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Greetings to you Anna Bee. I love your column and I can't wait to open up to read each week as I thoroughly enjoy the insight and wisdom that you so generously give so freely. I appreciate you and your many gifts.

I had a relationship with someone for 15 years. It ended in March when I was given, by chance, the opportunity to catch him on his cell phone deeply involved in conversation. Needless to say, that I was able to follow my instinct by following up and doing some investigation on my own. I found out that this man was deeply involved with another woman at work. I have no idea how long this had been going on but, I have since found out a number of lies that he was telling people about our living situation and what our relationship was. When I try to confront him he denies and continues to deny any responsibility for any of his actions. He moved out abruptly but had been coming over almost everyday. Of course, I maintain distance with him as I am deeply hurt and feel his betrayal but, this man has no conscious. I feel that he is some kind of pathological liar and that all those years were all lies. I realize that I contributed greatly to our relationship not working due to my personality or temperament and of course he blames a lot of the problems we faced on me. I find that very difficult to swallow since he also contributed to the chaos by not making any efforts to meet me half way. He has continued with his new relationship and moved with his new love. I wish him all the happiness and I am grateful for everything he has done for me and my kids but, I have always had a feeling about him and deep inside always suspected that there was something wrong with him but could never put my finger on it.

Can you help me by telling me if my perception was correct? It would help me to heal and to finally move forward. At this point, I am realizing a lot of things "were" wrong but I questioned and second guessed myself.

I accept his choice to move on and I fight everyday with myself to control any negative thoughts about this since, you know, "karma." I just want to know that had he been truthful and wanted to work things out, he would have. It did not just depend on me.

I doubt seriously if I will ever get involved with anyone else and at this point I am not worried about this. I feel that I am simply not designed to have that type of happiness and that my destiny leads me to other things.

Please help me to feel better about this since I cannot get any straight answers from this dude.

Many blessings.

Dear Many Blessings:

There were many instances in and during this relationship that led you to doubt that this man was truthful. If there is any lesson there, it is to learn to trust yourself.

He was not in alignment with your highest and best good and he operated during your relationship very selfishly. He created another "amusement," with another woman...never really looking at his own actions as sly and destructive.

I am not going to categorize him as a monster...but as totally unaware and not able to step up to the plate of responsibility for his own actions. It would have been more honest of him to admit that he was looking for an out from your relationship; but needed to create one where he would still be taken care of.

The current relationship that he has involved himself in has no better future for him or the woman he has chosen to use that the relationship you had with him.

I feel more pity for her in her unaware state.

She has not honestly looked at him and asked some real pertinent questions, i.e.: Why was he still living in your home? Why did he hush up on the phone when you were around? Who was paying his bills? Where was/is his sense of honesty and loyalty?

Is there something wrong with him you ask?

No more wrong with him than the women in his life have allowed. He blames everyone else for his problems. A blame is a pretty good tool for not accepting personal responsibility.

Don't throw your love life future away because of any unfulfilled relationships. Every relationship that does not work out wasn't supposed to; so that you can be prepared, well, balanced and free for the relationship that is waiting for you in your future.

I am glad that you are grateful to him for the lessons he taught you. Go ahead and move forward now. Life is good anyway, but really better without a thankless slob in the bedroom and in your checkbook. Trust yourself to choose a better man than this one and you will.

Dear Anna,

Hello it's me again. I'm writing to you because I was wondering about my future. I'm going to be a senior this year, so I was wondering if I am going to get my GPA back up to where it was before? Do you see me going to the college that I want to go to or am I just going to end up going to OLC? Do you see me getting off the rez right after high school or am I going to stick around. I don't want that and am I going to be what I want to be?

Now about kids... am I going to have kids?

Am I going to get married or just have one of those relationships where you have to stay together cause we have kids together.

Now about my mom, is she going to get better?

My sisters, are they going to do good in the future?

Ta Ta for now.

Dear TaTa for now:

Your GPA is totally up to you. I do see you working pretty hard this year because you want to go "off-rez" to school.

You may start college by going to OLC in Rapid. It is a good place to develop the studying skills you will need in another outside university and it is reasonably affordable. OLC also offers a step up to all Indian students. I personally believe they are a very good school and they have saved the futures of many young Lakota students. Please don't under appreciate them.

If you want to change that future path and go to a school outside of South Dakota then begin now by applying to the colleges and universities that you want to attend. Prepare yourself with a strong GPA and study for the SAT exams. It may be easier to work hard at OLC and learn how to study better to prepare yourself for another college or university after a few years of adjusting to college level independent study.

Don't get pregnant and move in with some guy because you are going to have his baby. It is just that simple. Make a better choice than that. You create your own future every single day. The choices you make today form tomorrows choices, opportunities, problems, obstacles and tone. Babies are not accidents; they are the choice of unprotected sex.

I don't see you as getting in your own way. I see you going to OLC for about a year and a half - and then to Black Hills State. You may decide to go to school in the Denver area instead of Black Hills State, but either way is okay.

You probably will continue with your education to get your master's degree in Kansas. Don't get too involved in a summer romance that would turn you into a slave to some small minded immature boy. Wait until you find a young man that is working as hard at making his life good as you are. Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

I am writing in concern of me and a few others who are away from home. We are trying to complete a task that is mandatory for us.

Do you see all of us graduating? Who will and who won't? It's a real challenge and takes strength to complete and we all get preoccupied worrying about our families. Will everything be good?

Best Wishes
Worrier

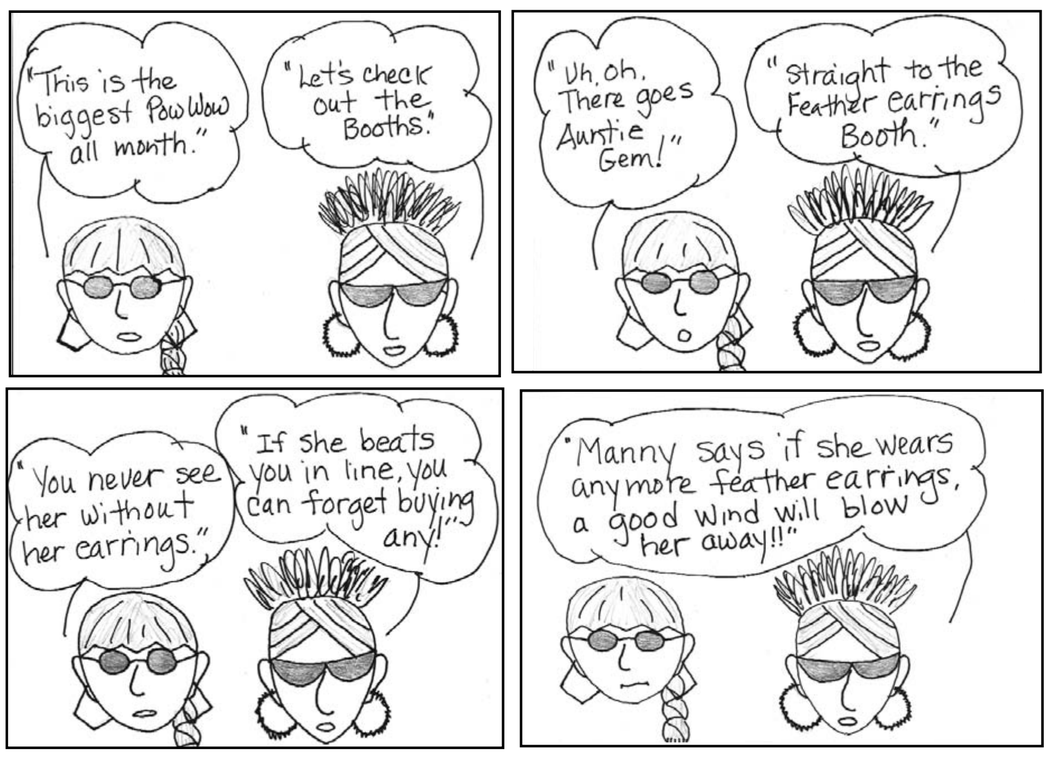
Dear Worrier:

I would like to change that greeting to Warrior.

Learning new skill levels that determine your own safety and help make the world a safer place is good. You will complete your schooling and your tasks and you will graduate. Every one will be proud of you.

You will complete your course and will be recognized for some special accomplishment. I see almost everyone with you managing to complete your program. I only see two who cannot hang in there with the physical stress.

Your families are fine and are waiting for your return. Blessings to you and to the others. You are making good choices for yourself. Everyone is proud of you.



You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551.

ROSEBUD COMPREHENSIVE HEALTHCARE FACILITY

ARE YOU GOING AWAY TO ATTEND COLLEGE?

HOW EXCITING! CONGRADULATIONS!

THERE ARE A FEW THINGS CONCERNING YOUR HEALTH CARE YOU SHOULD KNOW

Contract Health Services (CHS) are services provided by private doctors and hospitals when Rosebud IHS Hospital is unable to provide the emergency and/or specialty care. If you become ill or have a medical emergency while away at school there is a process that must be observed in order for IHS to pay for those services. If you have further questions or would like help in the process, please call (605) 747-3239.

Will IHS automatically pay for any health care services I require while attending college?

If care is available at an IHS/Tribal facility and is accessible to you, you must utilize these resources.

If you visit a non-IHS facility, you MUST sign a Release of Information to provide this information to the CHS office. The CHS committee cannot make a decision without sufficient medical information.

What information do I need to provide to Contract Health Services prior to leaving for school?

Full name(s) and date(s) of birth for the student and the family members who are living with the student while attending school

A letter from the registrar stating you have full-time or part-time student status and the number of semester hours enrolled (CHS only covers full-time students)

The date you moved away from the Rosebud Reservation

Health care resources available to you, such as Medicaid, Medicare, VA coverage, private insurance, etc.

Mailing and physical address before and after becoming a student

NON-EMERGENCY CARE: prior approval must be obtained before care is received. In order to obtain approval you must call (605) 747-3216 for the Contract Health office. There after the CHS committee will make the decision to approve/deny the request. If approval is not granted before the care or the student chooses to obtain medical services without approval, the student will be responsible for the bill incurred.

EMERGENCY CARE: this refers to emergency care only (immediate threat to loss of life, limb, or senses). You or someone acting on your behalf facility must notify CHS within 72 hours after treatment and/or admittance to another. It is the STUDENT'S responsibility to make sure that CHS is notified. Medical records pertaining to the treatment received must be mailed or faxed to the Contract Health office to be reviewed. If the treatment received is determined to be emergent by the committee, the request will be processed for payment

It is the student's responsibility to notify CHS, in writing, if they quit school, transfer, obtain a different student status, or lose/game alternate resource coverage.

8th Year of Severe Drought Conditions on Pine Ridge Reservation

Our department would like to remind the Oyate of the Pine Ridge Reservation that we are entering our 8th year of drought conditions. The weather has been kind lately, but we know it will heat up very quickly and every drop of water is precious.

Be Water-Wise Outdoors

- Try watering lawns in the early morning or late afternoon to prevent evaporation and scorching of the grass during mid-day sun.
- Try not to water on windy days
- Try using drip irrigation for your lawns. Saves 75% more water than s prinklers by limiting evaporation.
- Over-watering can cause fungus to form brown patches on lawns.
- Water lawns and shrubs once every five days to promote longer stronger roots.
- When mowing try keeping grass 3 inches long to help in moisture absorption.
- Keep swimming pools covered to stop debris and to help prevent evaporation.
- Try backwashing your swimming pool's filter weekly to help keep the water clean.
- Clean feet before entering pool.
- Make sure all livestock watering devices have an adequate float system that does not leak.
- Report all yard hydrant and thermo-line leaks to proper authorities.

Be Water-Wise Indoors

- Report all leaking bathroom and kitchen fixtures.
- When washing clothes use the right water setting for the load.
- Listen for toilet constantly running or filling when not in use (a leaky toilet can account for up to 1400 gallons of water lost per day, while the average household uses only 350 gallons per day.)
- A leaking toilet can cause your septic system to back up because of over saturation.
- Try using low flow toilets (1.5 to 2 gallons per flush), old toilets use up to 5 gallons per flush.
- Don't use your toilet as a garbage disposal.
- Turn off water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing dishes.
- Take fast showers instead of baths.
- Use low flow fixtures in baths and kitchens.
- An Ultra low flow showerhead uses 1.5 gallons per minute, while conventional showerheads can use up to 5 gallons per minute.

Sobriety ride

MARTIN - For the 15th year, the annual soberiety ride was held in conjunction with the Oglala Lakota Nation Pow wow. Every year, riders come from a different direction and ride into Pine Ridge. This year, more than 40 riders started riding just north of Martin on Tuesday, July 31 and will ride into the pow wow arbor on Thursday evening, where they will be recognized. When they arrive in Pine Ridge, they generally will have about a 100 riders. The event is coordinated to bring awareness to the youth and adults both on living an alcohol and drug free life. Thursday, July 31, kicks off the 22nd Annual Oglala Lakota Nation Pow Wow and Rodeo.

The theme for this year's pow wow is 'Defending Our Treaties and the Black Hills.' The theme promotes a continued awareness of defending the treaties, the Black Hills issue, protecting Bear Butte and the trust fund issue.

Events for the weekend include dance contest, royalty contest, sports activities, youth activities, a parade and many other activities. On Thursday, Aug. 2, at the pow wow grounds will be the first Teca Wacipi Okolakiciye event for the new school year.

Formaldehyde concerns puts FEMA trailers on hold

How many will the tribe receive? How will they be distributed?

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "Originally the tribes had until July 11 to come up with a proposal and rational why they needed a certain number of FEMA trailers and the Bureau was to have decided on a distribution plan by the end of July," said Paul Iron Cloud, as a member of President John Steele's management team, "but since then the Bureau tried to give the trailers to HUD who declined the offer so its back in the Bureau's hands."

"We heard today that the question of the FEMA trailers is on hold until they have a chance to investigate the concerns raised about the danger of the formaldehyde used to glue different parts together," said Dave Pourier, OST fifth member and new tribal point man on the FEMA homes, "we received a call today telling us that Senator Tim Johnson's staff is meeting with the BIA on Thursday to encourage them to check out the concerns about formaldehyde at FEMA's expense."

Pourier and Lester Lone Hill, a staff person from Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing, traveled to Hope, Ark. on July 19 to view the trailers first hand. According to Pourier, the trailers are really nice, they are all new, different colors, most of them are fully carpeted and have a pitched roof with shingles, some have fireplaces, with two or three bedrooms. They are all manufactured by different companies, many are all electric, some have glass sliding doors and new furniture is still in boxes.

housing board, appointed Iron Cloud as interim director and installed a three member reconstruction board was left in place until the Aug. 29 hearing. Originally the three member reconstruction board included Emma Pinky Iron Plume Clifford, Denise Mesteth and attorney Jim Wangenlander; Wagenlander has become an attorney for housing and his spot was filled by Taylor Little White Man, a past council representative from Medicine Root District and current Little Wound school board member.

"Even though things are a bit up in the air, we are moving ahead at housing to get some things done," said Iron Cloud, "we have an architectural firm out of Pierre, SHP who is looking at costing out the 27 log home ownership houses that are at a standstill; we hope to advertise for a prime contractor to finish the homes and ideally we hope to have families in the homes by Thanksgiving."

Iron Cloud hopes to do the same with the Ellsworth units, there are 24 units that already have the $2,500 down payments in place and he hopes to have SHP look at the cost of finishing that project as well.

"We plan to hire an auditor this week and get to work right away on a three year audit," said Iron Cloud who served as the executive director of housing from 1992 until 2000.

On Tuesday, the council voted to approve a number of items to send on to the Bureau of Indian Affairs to conduct a Secretarial Election to revise the constitution of the Oglala Sioux Tribe; the council voted to send on to the Bureau the question of four year staggered terms, conduct one general council meeting per month, create separation of powers between the OST Council, Judiciary and Executive Board, strengthen and clarify the process to impeach or recall elected officials of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, create a Bill of Rights and to insulate the OST Treasurer from the political process and remove the Treasurer from the Executive Board. The council did not approve requiring each district to have only two tribal council representatives and did not make a decision on requiring the council to enact a code of ethics within one year. Each resolution passed included a request of the Bureau to conduct the Secretarial Election within 90 days.

The council approved a Uniform Commercial Code proposed by the Economic and Business Development Committee, passed an ordinance requiring all OST employees to enforce, adhere to and abide by any and all ordinances promulgated by the tribe and failure to enforce, to abide by or adhere to shall result in immediate suspension or termination of employment and rescinded Resolution 06-80 and conditionally allowed Gordon Rosby to come on the reservation and work with Loneman School on facility improvement and building replacement. The council removed resolutions on the agenda that called for removing the school board of Crazy Horse School in Wanblee and for retro-ceding the school to the Bureau.

After getting a two thirds vote to add amendments to the charter of the Department of Public Safety, the issue was tabled and the judiciary committee was directed to bring it back in 30 days. In July, the judiciary committee approved a new charter for Public Safety. During discussion on the council floor, it came up that Public Safety had put together their own new charter and Steve Sandven, a past OST Attorney General, had reviewed the charter and put together a series of amendments. The council decided to have a working session coordinated by the judiciary committee on August 14, 15 and 16 to formalize a united approach to a new charter and then bring it back to council.

weekend and the high school basketball league in Rapid City," said Rama, who will be starting his fifth year as a teacher and head boy's coach at Red Cloud this month, "to end the summer season, we wanted a trip that would give the boy's a variety of new experiences and help them to set goals for beyond high school."

For several of the players, the plane ride was a first and sitting down with Senator John Thune in his conference room in the Russell Senate building on the Hill was an experience beyond their imagination.

"My world revolved around Murdo, I never thought that I would end up in Congress," admitted Thune who described his all state basketball years at Jones County high school as a great learning experience with benefits coming from both the wins and the losses, "I am really competitive and whether it was a loss in the regional finals or losing a senate race, I want to learn from it and come back and do it better the next go-around."

Tim Fishbach, a member of Senator Tim Johnson's staff gave a Capitol tour and Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth Sandlin met the team on the steps of the Capitol after speaking on the floor of the House Friday afternoon. Emil Her Many Horses from Rosebud and a curator on the staff of the National Museum of the American Indian, picked up the ball next and led the team on a tour of the national museum.

Jess Renteria, a Red Cloud graduate and staff member of the National Indian Gaming Association and Stacy Ecoffey, also a Red Cloud grad and staff member of the Health and Human Services Department took the ballplayers to the Yankees-Orioles game in Baltimore Friday night.

The Morongo tribe of California donated their suite/box at the Verizon Center for the Washington Mystics and Detroit Shock WNBA game Saturday afternoon.

The Red Cloud team went to D.C. with the intention of playing in the National Powerhouse tournament but after arriving on Thursday, there was no schedule available and on Friday, still no schedule, so the team went with Plan B. A couple of local tournament coordinators and coaches bent over backwards and squeezed Red Cloud into their already scheduled game competitions.

On Saturday night at the Parkdale High School gym between D.C. and Baltimore, Red Cloud knocked off Next Level 70-45 as Christian McGhee hit for 20 points and dished out six assists, Brier Iron Cloud and Billy Scott added 10 each and Iron Cloud and Carl Swallow grabbed seven rebounds each. In a second game Saturday night, Red Cloud defeated the City All Stars 57-35 as Lester Gotheridge hit for 15 points and pulled down nine rebounds and Dave Giago chipped in 10 points and also had nine boards. A highlight of the evening was to see Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth Sandlin and her husband come by the gym and take in the two games helping to support a local South Dakota team.

Sunday, Red Cloud moved up the road closer to Baltimore to the Bowie City gym where their first game found them playing the Suburban Coalition in the College/Pro division. After struggling against a team made up of college players who were playing or who had played in NCAA Division I, II or III and a couple of players who had played pro in Europe, Red Cloud bounced back from a 30 point deficit to lose 96-83.

McGhee led the way with 20 points and nine assists while Gotheridge and Swallow both scored 12 points and grabbed eight boards. Red Cloud got by the Maryland Magic from Baltimore 82-47 in their next game as Gotheridge hit for 14 points and 13 rebounds, Iron Cloud helped with 16 points, McGhee chipped in 12 points and Scott added 11. Red Cloud, led by Scott's 15 points, closed out their games with a 62-48 win over the Maryland Sun, an all star team from the Baltimore area.

A highlight for the young ballplayers from South Dakota turned out to be the appearance of Kevin Durant, a freshman this year at the University of Texas and this year's college player of the year who was picked by Seattle in the number two pick of the recent NBA draft. Durant signed autographs and stood for pictures with the Red Cloud players. He played a game in the college/pro division later on in the day.

"It was a great to have a chance to watch the Red Cloud team play," said Stacy Ecoffey, "I thought they did an exceptional job against the team made up of college and semi-pro players, they didn't give up and fought back against a physically stronger and more experienced team, I was really proud of the team."

The Washington trip for the Red Cloud boys couldn't have happened without a lot of help including the OST Health Administration and OST Health Education, the National Indian Gaming Association, the Morongo Tribe of California, KILI Radio, Stacy Ecoffey, Jess Renteria, Jenn Schaer, John McLaughlin and a number of volunteers in D.C. and the Pine ridge area.

"The trip was put together to give the boys a variety of experiences and to help them understand how the work they have been doing can pay off now and down the road," said Rama, "many people helped us out and the local folks in Baltimore who helped us overcome the failure of the Powerhouse tourney can't be thanked enough, they were great and the trip was a fantastic experience for these young men, I hope it helps to continue to motivate them to set goals and pursue their dreams."

"If the formaldehyde issue gets worked out, we still have no idea how the Bureau will distribute the trailers," said Pourier, "July 20 was the deadline to inspect the trailers in Arkansas and we were the 42nd tribe to send representatives to get a first hand look; some came from as far away as California and Montana."

Senator Tim Johnson pushed legislation earlier this year to distribute as many as 2,000 surplus FEMA trailers to tribes across Indian Country to help deal with critical housing shortages. Since the proposal surfaced, there have been a number of articles written expressing concerns about the high levels of formaldehyde present in the trailers.

"If the trailers receive a clean bill of health from the Centers for Disease Control or the EPA or whoever checks them out, we still have to figure out how we would distribute them on Pine Ridge," added Pourier, "and I would really like to see some continuity between each district as to the guidelines used to decide who get s the trailers and I really think it would be great if that was decided before the trailers arrived so when the trailer leaves Arkansas the home site would already have been designated and prepared so the new home could go straight to the site and not be parked in a yard for weeks or months at a time."

Each trailer would cost $16,000 with $6,000 used to get the trailer from Arkansas to South Dakota and $10,000 to prepare the site.

In a plan presented to the tribal council earlier this summer, $4.6 million would be raised by rewriting the tribe's bond and making requests to Rural Development, Bureau of Indian Affairs and Shakopee Mdewankanton Sioux Community.

That would provide financial resources for 270 trailers; President Steele is pushing for 300 hew homes for Pine Ridge reservation.

"There are just too many questions not being answered," said Pourier, "how many will we get, are they safe, how many will each district get, how will we decide who gets them, where will the home sites be and do we have time before the first snow flies to get them situated and families settled in?"

Amateurs can be promoted through Native American Boxing Council

By T.L.Standing Soldier
Special to the Times

There has been a question asked by Native people concerning the lack of professional Boxers amongst the Native population.

There have been numerous amateur champions in both the national and regional Golden and Silver gloves competition. Where do these Native amateur champions go after they've won one or more amateur titles? Is there legitimate reasons why they don't take the next step in their boxing careers and turn pro? Do they lack the support of their coaches, managers, or their tribes to make a living at something they're good at? Is it enough for them to remain amateur champions and not try to become a national champions at the professional level? If there are Native American boxers who want to go beyond the amateur ranks and test their skills at the professional level there is an organization that has been created to help them achieve this goal.

The Native American Boxing Council is an organization that has been created and is established with the North American Boxing Federation.

The NABF is affiliated with the World Boxing Council. The Native American Boxing Council was established to promote professional boxing among the Native American boxers from Canada, Mexico, and the United States.

The Native American Boxing Council will have 17 weight divisions and will rank the top ten fighters in each division. The goal of the NABC is to establish a champion in each of the 17 divisions. In order for a fighter to be eligible to fight for a title or to be ranked among the top ten professional Native boxers they must be members of a federally recognized tribe and meet the established governing rules set by the NABC.

The NABC will regulate itself under the policies, rules and guidelines of the NABF. It is the hope and goal of the Native American Boxing Council to provide Native American boxers a positive outlet to further their careers, help them to become professional boxers, promote tribal pride and culture. It is also the hope of the NABC to promote and showcase Native American boxers on a national level.

The Native American Boxing Council is inviting Native boxers to join and are taking applications from professional Native American boxers who would like to join the organization. If there are any Native Americans who are ready to take the next step in their boxing careers and turn pro there is now an organization that is exclusively Native.

Talk to your managers or coaches and get ready to be a part of the world of professional boxing.

Rosebud CHR program honored by national director

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Community Health Program was honored on July 31 in a ceremony held at the RST council chambers. National CHR Director, Cathy Stueckman, Lynn Birk of the Mountain Plains Health Consortium and Ron Galloway, Aberdeen Area CHR program coordinator were present for the honoring.

Five Rosebud CHR's were honored for teaching a three week basic training course during June of 2006 and included, Karen Riefel, Sarah Reynolds, Simone Lambert, Andrew Iron Shell, and Julie Lambert. The team was recognized for being the first ever to be called upon to teach other CHR's. The team was cited as having a great deal of expertise, knowledge and credentials in health care, thus, the assignment.

The Rosebud CHR program is apparently the first program to gain such national recognition and the honor will help to sustain their important outreach work in the community.

Tribal members on the Rosebud reservation are quite familiar with the vital work that CHR's do in transporting patients, delivering medications as needed and other follow-up consultations.

RST tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, was on travel status to Chadron, NEB and would be returning in the afternoon, however, RST vice-president, Wayne Boyd, was on hand to represent RST. An award of excellence was presented to RST council members, Fern Bordeaux-Boltz, Stephanie Sully, Cyril "Whitey" Scott,

The RST community health program is administered by acting director, Fontaine Guerue.

Rodney Bordeaux's ethics charge sent back to committee

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Sioux Tribal President Rodney M. Bordeaux issued the following statement regarding the July 30 Tribal Council hearing for the ethics complaint against him.

"The Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council voted to rule today's hearing Out of Order. On May 14, 2007, more than two months ago, the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Ethics Commission completed an extensive search for information to substantiate Webster Two Hawk's charge of an ethics violation against me, in the Zibell land purchase by Tribal Land Enterprise. The Ethics Commission found no validity in his request.

According to RST's legal counsel, who represents the Rosebud Sioux Tribe in its entirety, and represents all Constitutional Officers, tribal council members, and RST employees, the Ethics Commission did not properly refer ethics charges to the council. Therefore, the hearing today, was found to be out of compliance with tribal law. Again, the Ethics Commission found no validity in Mr. Webster Two Hawk's ethics complaint."

"However, the tribal council referred this issue back to the Ethics Commission for clarification and asked them to bring their decision back within two weeks."

"There have been several mis-statements in the press not authorized by the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council, or president regarding today's hearing on ethics charges against me and several tribal council persons serving on the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Tribal Land Enterprise Board of Directors, specifically, RST Representative Fern Bordeaux-Boltz and RST Representative Mike Boltz.

This improperly referred issue to the tribal council has not prevented me from focusing on issues that we have been working on every day. We are working to get jobs here by creating sustainable businesses and industry that improve our standards of living for our people. We are working to improve health care, our education system, improve access to affordable housing, alleviate the suicide epidemic afflicting our communities, defend our treaty rights, preserve our culture and language, protect our veterans' rights, and protect and advocate for our elderly."

"The only way to remove the president or the vice president under the RST Constitution and Bylaws is by recall.

Procedures for the recall of the president or vice president may be initiated by a petition signed by at least 50 percent of those members who voted in the last tribal election. No such petition has been presented to start the recall process."

"Per tribal law, TLE has the authority to make land purchases on behalf of the tribe. This authority includes the Zibell property purchase. This Zibell property was an original allotment originally held by a tribal member named Mary Dog Soldier at one time. This property is within the original boundaries of our reservation. We are working to reclaim lands that originally belonged to our tribe."

"The decision to purchase the Zibell land was made by the majority of the TLE Board of Directors. An individual board member cannot authorize any land purchase."

"As stated in previous press releases, this land purchase was at a public auction, where the actual price paid is never what the appraised value is.

More often that not, the sale price is greater than the appraised value. Across this great country, Indian Nations that can afford to buy back their former lands are paying a much greater price from what it was originally paid for when purchased by non-Indians.

RST is fortunate to have an organization like TLE, which has limited resources to purchase fractionated interests and tracts of land that were formerly ours.

There is great competition for land purchases in, and, around our reservation. We must be prepared to deal with this competition. The Tribal Council and TLE need to better coordinate such purchases in the future. We must remain vigilant and work together."

Please contact Mr. Rodney M. Bordeaux at (605) 747.2381 if there are any questions.

Lakota language preservation project is up and running

ROSEBUD - The Lakota Language Preservation Project presently housed in the RST Tribal Education building has "hit the ground running" and has embarked on identifying start-up activities that are meant to address several major outcomes for the project. RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux, Phil Two Eagle and SGU Lakota Studies instructor, Victor Douville, have been instrumental in envisioning a program that will demonstrate the commitment of the Sicangu Lakota to preserving, protecting and increasing Lakota language use in the community.

Douville and other educators such as Francis Whitebird, Ben Black Bear, Sandra Black Bear, Philomene White Lance and others are convinced that something must be done to preserve the beautiful Lakota language which is still intact and continues to be prevalent in many of the outer lying communities, such as Spring Creek, Parmelee, Horse Creek, Corn Creek, Black Pipe, Upper Cut Meat, Milk's Camp, He Dog, Bull Creek and Swift Bear community.

The Lakota Language Preservation Project will be administered by Dr. Archie Beauvais, who holds a doctorate in administration, planning and social policy from Harvard University. Additionally, he has two alumni awards from Northern Arizona University and a 2006 Alumni of Color Conference Award from Harvard.

The project will employ one additional personnel and will begin initial assessments as to the number of Lakota speakers who live on the Rosebud reservation. Once complete, a strategy to increase the number of Lakota speakers in each community will be completed and put into action.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Back to school time just around the corner

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Back to school time is here, the summer has flown by and we are again on the exciting edge of a new school year. For returning school children and their parents this fall, the schools which they will be attending will be an important part of their lives as it represents a third of their lives. Besides all of the usual responsibilities of being an involved parent, it will also be important to get acquainted with teachers, staff and the physical layout of school premises.

It will be equally important to know something about the schools, such as the number of "lockdowns" that may have been imposed upon the school last year, the schools status under the No Child Left Behind Act and even the number of Gates Millennium Scholars.

It seems like many schools are not totally forthcoming and tend to de-emphasize their status under NCLB and parents need to know their options in case the school continues to accept the status quo.

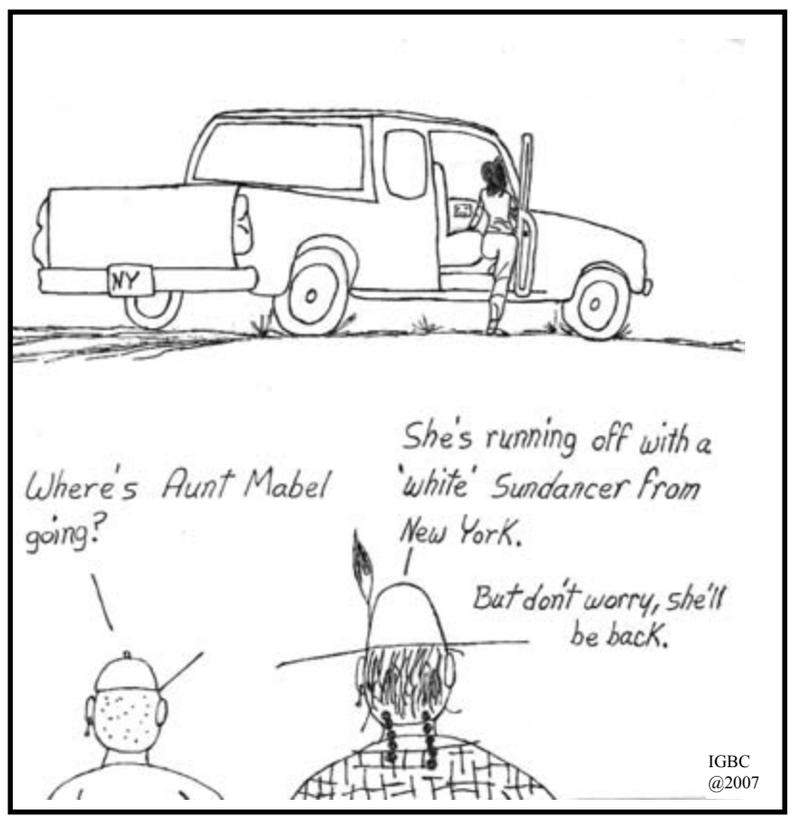
Parents are also welcome on many parent committees at their school and this is one way of working to involve other parents with everything from report card night, gang violence initiatives, suicide prevention efforts and simply staying fully informed about their children's education.

Parent involvement is not always about being involved on committees and such, parent involvement can mean just be that supporter your child needs to stay in school and giving them that wisdom and strength they need to get educated.

If we want our children to be successful academically, we need to also take a look at ourselves and the perceptions we are giving them.

We are role models to our children and how we feel about education affects them in some shape or form.

Education is one of the most valuable coping tools our children will have to be successful in their lives and we are a part of how that becomes engrained in them.



Education is the key to creating confidence and positive self-esteem as children progress through their school years.

Parents can also go to many their school's websites, most of which are very attractive and user friendly, and see for themselves the extent of how much Lakota oriented content is actually present among other academic content.

"Back to School" is an exciting and intimidating time for many of our children and getting them ready both physically, emotionally and socially and most will want to know that their parents and tiospaye are firmly behind them.

Sometimes, it's a hard time for us as parents, especially if we don't have the financial means to prepare them for school in terms of new clothes and shoes.

Ten years ago, when I worked at Little Wound School, I remember two high school boys coming to my office and plopping down on the couches in the teacher study area and the impact of the words of one of those teenagers was good advice not only to his friend but to me. He emphasized to the other how unimportant it was to stress out about his $100 jeans, as it stressed his mother out also. He said 'it isn't the $100 jeans that make you, it's what you are inside that makes you.' He added that his own mother bought his jeans from Walmart and they probably were only $10 bucks but they fit and they did the job. 'It's not the jeans that make me but how I view myself.'

Response to 'Are you Oglala or Wasicu?'

Dear Editor:

Charmaine White Face recently wrote an editorial entitled "Are You Oglala or Wasicu." Having lived a few miles outside of Kyle for several years and worked with the Kyle Ambulance Service I became familiar with the word Wasicu. Charmaine points out that it is used to reference the white man and literally means takes the fat. She adds that it "has that meaning for a good reason." May I add that in all my time in Kyle, I never heard the term wasicu being used in a polite or friendly manner.

I agree with Charmaine that the people who want to mine uranium in Pine Ridge are probably not familiar with the Indigenous culture(s).

Perhaps they simply don't care. They are also probably using a "colonialist mindset" in asserting their rights to do such mining in Pine Ridge. I would go so far as to call them "insensitive, robber baron, colonialist, land grabbing idiots" in need of some education. If more civilized methods prove worthless perhaps they may need to be educated with the business end of a shovel. There, I just proved that I can also be angry, indignant and disappointed.

The translation of wasicu is correctly stated by Charmaine. Let us presume that the common use by Lakota speakers of "wasicu" is simply a descriptive term. We can therefore infer that the common use by many "Arian White Supremacists" of the words Redskin or Niger are also simply descriptive terms.

Charmaine, I'm going to give you the benefit of the doubt that you did not intend to use the word wasicu as a pejorative swear word to identify how you feel about white people. On the other hand perhaps you need to understand that as offensive as the words Redskin or Squaw are to you, so have come to be the terms: "Wasicu or Honky" to me.

Perhaps a bit more sensitivity to the other culture when you are asking for sensitivity to your culture will go a long way in helping to improve "race-ist" relations.

Words from the 'trenches'

Family literacy project promotes reading in home

Connie Smith-Blanco

All year, and especially this month, Amanda and I have been buzzing around the rez meeting with school boards and administrators and teachers concerning our three-year-old Family Literacy Project. It hasn't been easy as most school boards meet in the early evening but Amanda and I have made a commitment to this important project and we intend to tell everyone we can about it.

What is our project? It's a project that involves the Lakota Country Times, local public and reservation schools, and most important, families of school-age children.

Actually the families are the most important people affected, because this project brings them something they have never had before, a local newspaper that brings them 'positive' lakota culture, lakota language, lakota values and lakota pride.

NCLB student reading scores have become one of the most talked about topics in both local and national schools today. The ability to read, as well as the "want" to read, have been steadily declining.

It's no different here in Indian Country. Parents want "Positive" lakota news that would make their families "want" to sit down together and read, and talk, and promote literacy in their own families?

Most Native American homes lack reading materials and local schools have remained a primary source of reading material for these families. Okay, this takes care of students while they are at school, but what happens to them once they arrive home?

Is there really anything the students and their families can sit down to each week and read "alone or together" that will promote their self-esteem? That will give them joy and make them proud that they are lakota? Think lakota? Speak lakota?

The answer has sadly been-NO! There has always been that negative news out there telling the lakota people what's wrong with them, who is in trouble with the law again, and how many times.

The printed news of what is happening in the local white community papers has little to do with local lakota families, the way they live their lives in their Indian communities, and family tiospayes. our students deserve better!

It's easy to print no-brainer, negative lakota news. It takes a lot of work to print the tons and tons of positve and cultural lakota news!

Amanda and I have worked hard to step in and fill this empty void. Why can't Native American children and family members have a newspaper they can relate to? If it's so important for these students and families to "want" to read then why not give them something positive to read? Which in turn causes "more" reading among "all" family members age two to ninety-two?

How about a Lakota crossword puzzle, lakota stories written in lakota, lakota students participating in "their" culture in such things as pow wows, dancing, hand-games, as well as the 'usual" school activities like sports, spelling bees, one-act plays, etc.? If you give these kinds of stories and pictures to kids and families to read guess what happens?

They will reach for 'more' reading and therefore have the best opportunity to raise the bar in those NCLB reading scores.

Who pays for this Family Literacy project? It's not the grants we apply for but are never 'granted.' So that leaves the schools, of course! They are mandated by federal and state law to provide reading literacy programs and resources. Schools are directed to provide materials that 'every' student finds enjoyable to read right now.

Reading opens doors for our students to achieve positive self-esteem and worthwhile job and lifetime opportunities.

We travel to every school that will listen to us, and we tell them how we can offer their families a reading resource that costs less each month than the cost of purchasing each student one book.

Lakota Country Times creates a partnership with schools by absorbing the production and editing costs. We only need reimbursement for paper, ink, and postage expense. This small cost is cheaper than an outdated, monthly school newsletter.

We mail our newspapers to 'every' student's home every week! This allows 'every' student to experience the joy and pride of reading and 'relating' to community and school news in a lakota newspaper.

Call your local school administration or school board and see if they can provide this program to all students. Funding is available but you have to ask! Make them "make" it a priority for family literacy in Indian Country.

Everyone is entitled to read and learn to read, and that's our Family Literacy Project here in the trenches.

Connie Smith-Blanco, Oglala Lakota, is co-owner, business manager and marketing director of Lakota Country Times. She pursued a music career in Oklahoma, Tennessee and lived near her sister in Texas. After 30 years she moved back to her roots and her family, in South Dakota with two of her three daughters.

Safety of FEMA homes questioned

Dear Editor:

I'm writing concerning an article that was written in a past newspaper (July 5-11 2007) where the tribal president (John Yellow Bird Steele) is asking for the United States government and FEMA to donate 300 FEMA trailers.

Okay, this is the problem.

1) All week Congress has been holding Congressional hearings on these FEMA trailers, a number of hurricane Katrina victims testified that they and their family members are sufering from respiratory problems.

Some people testified that they lost family members due to the formaldehyde fumes in these trailers.

2) These trailers were made from a material exposed to formaldehyde, the definition of formaldehyde is "a toxic gas used chiefly as a disinfectant and preservative".

This is the material making people sick.

This is what our tribal president is asking the United States government to bring to our oyate (people) to live in. NBC, ABC, and CBS National News have been doing stories on this, now our tribal president should be researching this as well as notifying the people of this very dangerous hazard that he is asking this government to send to our reservation.

That's how dangerous this matter is, and our people need to be made aware of this issue.

Guest Column

If we don't work for it then what is it worth?

The following is a response to Dana Badmilk's question she posed in one of her recent columns.

By Dr. Jim Wilson
GUEST COLUMN

Dear Dana:

In your July 12 'Finding My Voice' column you asked the most important question facing the Oglala Sioux Tribe (and many other tribes and communities): "How do we better ourselves and get rid of these dang statistics?"

Your answer is in your question: by bettering ourselves. For a moment of humor just picture a Brave in breechcloth lifting himself upward by his moccasins (or his braids)!

Now, let's get serious.

I have been speaking and writing about this very issue for years. Many readers may not know that I was the only full-time national director (1965-71) of the federal War on Poverty for American Indians. I took over shortly after Congress authorized the program and left shortly before Congress terminated the program. Many elements of the Office of Economic Opportunity (OEO) Indian program remain with us today; Head Start, Parent-child Centers, Community Health Representatives (CHRs), Senior Citizen Centers, Home Winterization, and numerous administrative and leadership programs in health, journalism, education and law.

My wife (Florence Whipple) and I graduated from Pine Ridge High School in 1950 and were married in 1953 (as planned). She graduated from Southern State Teachers College in 1954 (English major) while I finished my four year hitch in the US Navy.

I graduated from Northern State Teachers College (Social Science major) in 1959. We both earned graduate degrees from Arizona State University and were both teaching at Chadron State College in 1965 when Sergeant Schriver asked me to go to Washington, DC, to run the American Indian War on Poverty program.

That is when I first asked myself the very same question you have asked. I did not have clear answers right then, but was enthusiastic and raring to go. My book-learning had taught me how to identify a problem, form a theory to solve it and plod through eliminating alternatives. But I did not have time for long term research. I needed answers quickly! As I discussed my dilemma with my wife (Florence) she asked a startling question: "How did you get where you are today?"

Dana, what I learned from answering her question contributed to what I consider the most successful American Indian policy decisions to ever be implemented.

First, I learned that economic development is not a male thing; females are at least the equal of males and must be involved. And, second, I learned that no one can do economic development to or for another person or group.

Once understanding those two principles, we needed to explain how individuals, families and teams became successful. No one has a magic wand to wave and make things happen. I worked at understanding the growth and development of successful people by studying success motivation as a responsibility of parents, teachers, coaches and administrators.

Their question is: "How do we get more from a person than they are voluntarily giving and get them to maintain (sustain) the new level of performance?"

We must understand that positive growth and development is a sequential process; it must start at the beginning and go through each step in proper sequence as in building a strong house. This process is proven and consistently successful, but not known by all. Mature adults who understand this can manage their own growth and development; it is called 'self-improvement.'

Stage One: Development of self esteem begins at birth. Positive bonding builds confidence. Mother is main force. Process of building on success is re-enforcing, giving person self-confidence and diminishing need for external approval. Internalized reward system eliminates need for external approvals as in gangs or from peer pressures. Self-improvement programs do work.

Stage Two: Learning Econ 101 begins about time speech begins. Learns about wants vs. needs. Understands productivity and benefits and pleasures of producing. Understands sweat equity.

Stage Three. Personal Values System. Begins about time children start interacting with other, older people. Learns what matters most. Wants and is willing to work for family, home, security, etc. Sets long term goals and judges self and self-performance. Initiates and finishes projects.

Stage Four. Interpersonal skills (Personality) refinement. Starts much earlier but needs effort. Firms up understanding and application of Golden Rule. Selects own friends and activities.

Stage Five. Attitude towards life (the view from inside) is cemented and is expressed as body language and verbal responses to both opportunities and obstacles. This is the honest face you show the world. It is the result of all of the above.

So, how do we put all we know to work? As a parent, teacher, coach or administrator we must decide what role we will play. I prefer the role of Coach.

The Coach must also ask: "How do we get more from a person than they are voluntarily giving and get them to maintain (sustain) the new level of performance? There are only three ways to solve any problem: Do it yourself (hit or miss), let someone else solve it (and take the consequences) or do nothing (and pray).

By becoming Coaches we pro-actively encourage the do-it-yourself method and increase the successes and reduce the failures to build problem-solving skills and self-esteem.

Knowing all of this we (Coaches) understand the need (and values) of providing positive guidance, some prevention (boundaries) and lots of encouragement as we see the sequence unfold. We need to teach individuals how to solve problems, how to evaluate their own performance and how to set personal goals. Community action is a larger form of individual action.

In federal programs bureaucrats must also learn how to eliminate obstacles because the elimination of obstacles is a form of creating opportunity!

In our OEO Community Action Programs (CAPs) we focused on getting the community to identify problems and set goals to eliminate them. We also encouraged communities to address unmet needs and set goals to meet those needs.

We contracted with Universities (ICAPs) to provide Training and Technical Assistance as defined by the communities.

And, we encouraged the Universities to hire local community members (and forever changed those Universities, also). And, believe it or not, in six years we spent some $200 million in federal money and never lost a dime! (We had 3 instances of misapplication of funds internally but resolved the problems and no tribe had to repay one cent!).

Dana, nobody says it is easy, but if we don't work for it then what is it worth?

Notes From Indian Country

Challenging the rich gaming tribes in California

Has the luster and adventure of the Indian casinos in California started to wear thin?

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)
© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

A labor union and racetrack owner filed ballot measures on Friday seeking to overturn expansive new gambling compacts for some of the state's richest Indian tribes, according to an article in The San Diego Union-Tribune.

The measures would give the voters of California the opportunity to vote on the pending compacts that would allow the Sycuan of El Cajon and the Pechanga of Temecula to build some of the largest casinos in the world.

The corporate owner of the Hollywood Park and Bay Meadows horse racetracks joined with the union UNITE HERE, with oral support from some of the rival Indian tribes, to block the expansion.

The 23-year compacts would permit the Pechanga and Morongo to operate up to 7,500 slot machines each.

Sycuan and Agua Caliente, a Palm Springs tribe, could have as many as 5,000 slot machines each.

All four tribes are currently limited to 2,000 slot machines, the maximum under the state's 1999 compacts.

In the early years of gaming in California rivalries between some gaming tribes has escalated because rich tribes like the Agua Caliente and Pechanga tried to block compacts negotiated by Pala and the Lytton band of San Pablo and the Quechan of Imperial County that delayed or blocked deals that cost those tribes millions of dollars.

Those tribes will probably support the ballot measures by UNITE HERE and the racetracks against the four tribes seeking the huge expansion.

There appears to be growing opposition to some of the gaming compacts approved by Gov. Arnold Schwarzennegger in recent years and some polls suggest that Californians may be starting to question the rapid growth of casino gaming.

Cheryl Schmidt, head of the gaming watchdog Stand Up for California, said, "There is a change in attitude.

People have soured on the political influence of the tribes, their internal infighting and they want to limit the proliferation of gaming."

Jack Gribbon of UNITE HERE said, "Voters are circumspect about this expansion.

They realize it is the rich getting richer that does nothing for workers, does nothing for poor tribes and I believe we will win that argument."

A spokesman for the racetracks, Greg Larson, said, "These compacts grant a monopoly on electronic gaming devices to tribes closing the door on California racing's ability to compete with racetracks in other states."

Most Californians supported Indian gaming when it was about helping Indians rise out of poverty, but many now feel that this mission has been accomplished 10-times over for most of California's tribes although there are still a few isolated tribes that continue to live in poverty.

The political infighting by some of the tribes against each other as gaming became the goose that laid the golden egg has also turned off many Californians and has generated rivalries between different tribes that would support the union and the racetracks against their fellow tribes.

"Tribes and tribal leaders have long memories," said Howard Dickstein, an attorney representing the Pala tribe.

The ballot measures would place before voters four bills that ratified the compacts. Independently, the gaming agreements still must be approved by the Interior Department before taking effect according to the San Diego Union-Tribune.

While visiting San Diego last week I was reminded of how far tribes like the Sycuan have come when I attended an outdoor, evening concert called Marvin at the Movies that starred the world famous songwriter and conductor, Marvin Hamlisch.

Several members of the tribe were present at the concert primarily because the Sycuan Resort and Casino sponsored the entire event. In fact a full-page ad in the program pictured a photo of the tribe's chairman, Daniel J. Tucker, and photos of the entire tribal council.

I had the fortune, or misfortune, of staying at the Marriott on the Harbor not knowing that next door at the San Diego Convention Center 120,000 fanatics were attending the Comic-con International Convention.

I knew something was up when I climbed on the elevator at the hotel and was suddenly joined by Spiderman, Darth Vader and Superman.

I vividly recall visiting the Sycuan and Pechanga when I was stationed with the Navy in San Diego in the 1950s and I was appalled at the extreme poverty I found there.

It reminded me so much of my home on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota where the riches of Indian gaming are only a dream. I can only admire these tribes for their good fortune.

As the old saying goes, "There are only three ways to a successful business and they are location, location and location."

More than 1,300 pipes being offered

Dear Editor:

The following is the English version of Francis Apple's Lakota translation published in the July 19 Lakota Country Times opinion pages.

The Creator gave our Lakota Oyate a sacred language. The Oyate attached this language to our most sacred pipe when it was brought to us. Now, almost two thousand years has passed and our New Age Lakota are trying to reconnect to our past, but they're using the corrupt white man's language with the cannunpa, and it seems as though its not working.

Example: There's 32 practicing Medicine Men on the Pine Ridge. Someone said there's 53 Sun Dances here on our reservation with an average of 25 dancers at each Sun Dance. That would add up to a bit over 1,300 pipes being offered.

Our conditions on the Pine Ridge are not getting better. Our youth are going off in the wrong way. Drug dealers are funning our society. Diabetes and now cancer is dealing a blow to our Oyate. Even the weather is affecting us.

The thunder storms always goes to the north and south of us. The old ones are saying these things are upon us because the youth are causing our Sacred language of non effect. (Ito hectu welco) asakawapi Tanhansi the honorable John Around Him said, the wakiyan Oyate don't speak the white man's language.

The true wealth of the South Dakota millionaire Indian

By Andrew Iron Shell
Special to the Times

In 1980 the U.S. Supreme Court awarded millions of dollars in compensation to the Lakota Sioux Nations for the illegal taking of traditional lands including the Black Hills of South Dakota.

The millionaire Indian of South Dakota lives very differently than the handful of millionaire Indians fortunate to have a casino by a major interstate or a working relationship with their State Governor.

The monies awarded to appease the guilty conscience of U.S. history has never been touched by the Lakota Nations. We're not here to cure the dark heart of Uncle Sam. We can not take blood money for lands which hold the origins of who we are.

By not taking the blood monies we base our wealth on the values of our traditional morals. It's up to us to ask, what challenges our honorable position? What are the enemies in our mist that may force us to take this money? Adversaries like poverty, inadequate health care, inadequate housing, or lack of opportunity within our own homelands.

All those have the ability to sway a future decision to take the money.

It is time to triage Indian country from the Bush Experience? The effects are like a cancer that will show itself over time. If you measure Indian Health Service funding to diagnosis erosion: trust responsibility and obligation to treaty law went unceremoniously out of style by the federal government some time ago.

We were all preoccupied looking for weapons of mass destruction to notice that it was dissolved without tribal consultation.

Wild Bill Clinton had elk medicine when he came to Pine Ridge as president. That wasn't enough to convince him to pardon Leonard Peilter in the 11th hour of his presidency.

His life-time, body guard protection would have been jeopardized had he done that. Now his wife refuses to meet with any Indians. Does she view all Indians with broken down Cadillac Escalades next to pimped out HUD Housing or is that misconception reserved for the larger casino owning Tribes?

The average American can never understand the wealth found in poverty. The wealth one has from having to pull together in order to survive.

A harder life than most, American Indians, especially in South Dakota, have remained closer to wolakota (traditional life) because of being ignored by the American dream. That's actually been a benefit.

The material things will come to us over time. There should be no hurry to be conditioned as an irresponsible consumer like the rest of America.

The youthful American Indian population in South Dakota needs direction from tribal politicians, spiritual leaders, elders.

Many youth see how fragmented we have become in addressing the Black Hills Treaty issues. Why has it become such a white elephant in the room that so few speak to it anymore?

Our people deserve to be shown how we can benefit from the alternative. We did not take the money, so what do we do from here to establish our foot print back in the Black Hills? Why are tribes not scurrying to buy back Black Hills lands which eventually could become trust status lands once again? Where are our visionaries? Can tribal politicians advocate the vision we need while suckling off the chest of the federal dollar which keep us fighting like crabs in a bucket?

The millionaire Indians of South Dakota will get mad someday. Bring the Little Big Horn to Rapid City. Start by not accepting the abuse placed on us just because we are Indians.

Once we demand respect on an individual level than we have a right to go after the big fish and claim victories on issues like treaty law. It is then that the world will see the true wealth of the South Dakota millionaire Indian!

Northern Perspectives

Acknowledging our leaders in our communities

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I enjoyed Tim Giago's column on Native people who have made an impact on the national scene last week.

As someone who reads in a selective way, I am familiar with some of the folks he highlighted. I actually had dinner with other Native educators and Louise Erdrich in Boston before she became a writer. Who knew! as it is commonly said when someone is surprised.

I always thought it would be fun to do sort of a "Who's Who on the Rosebud" but I would be at a loss as to how to assess who the movers and shakers are on the Rosebud. It would be fun to see one of our own publishing such a documentary in any media form. The thing about such a tribute is that it would be forever changing as young Sicangu youngsters return from the university and find their rightful place in an ever tightening job market.

I am always thrilled at the fact that the Rosebud Sioux Tribe has, as a priority, the education of talented and promising young people in the future by setting aside some funding.

I think we have to think that way even though the future and next seven generations seem so abstract. Many of us older educators are getting tired and it nearing the time that we need to hand off the baton to them or at least think about grooming some of the more promising youngsters to take our place.

Speaking of promising, the young and talented Sicangu youth are more attuned to the latest in technology and many of them are now studying and thinking about how they can put it into practice. It is almost second nature to them as they grew up with technology and now their burden is understand how it may be applied to the Rosebud in order to make it a better place to live.

The face of Indian Country is slowly changing and it is no different on the Rosebud "rez."

There are some powerful influences in the world and many of them are slowing seeping into the infrastructure that is our social and familial foundation. I suppose there are many good things out there that may transform our life for the better and we will have to wait and see.

I guess I have written about some very talented Sicangu people who would qualify as 'finishers' and who have made an impact on the Rosebud or who will soon be over be. Individuals like SDSM&T senior, Jade Herman and Augustana College freshman, Tootie Herman, are a couple that come to mind.

I look for both of them to make an impact one day, if not on the Rosebud, then certainly in their own lives and family as they are both excellent scholars. Dr. Edward Valandra finished his Ph.D not long ago and he is already making an impact with his recent publication which is no small feat.

Of course, there are many other talented Rosebudders, but that can be the subject of such a tribute one day.

I guess the point is, is that we're fortunate that there are individuals from our own respective tribes who are talented who will come to the forefront soon and we need to acknowledge them.

Dr. Archie Beauvais, (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and currently works as the director of the Lakota language preservation project for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

We don't need to be victimized again

Dear Editor:

The Oglala Tribal Presidents management team and the executive director of housing are working hard to buy FEMA trailers. My concern is in the wake of a congressional hearing held on the 19th of July, 2007 by the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee that is investigating the dangerous amounts of formaldehyde contamination found in these FEMA trailers.

Is the tribe aware of this disturbing development?

And if not, I think the tribal management team should take a hard look at what condition these trailers are in before committing to buying them.

I know that there is a great need for affordable housing in Pine Ridge, but the people who are getting them need to know if they are safe from harmful contaminates. Formaldehyde is a toxic gas, and some of its uses are as a disinfectant and preservative as in glue, etc. Unfortunately these are just two of its uses in the construction of trailer homes.

Exposure to large amounts of this known poison can lead to leukemia, asthma and other respiratory problems.

The health and welfare of the young and the elderly, who I imagine will be the ones living in these homes, needs to be protected. I think this is the job of the elected council representatives to investigate this issue.

It seems to me its one of those history repeating itself scenarios where we were receiving contaminated articles given to our ancestors of long ago. We don't need to be victimized again.

White Face to receive Nuclear Free Future award

RAPID CITY - The Nuclear-Free Future Awards honor individuals, organizations and communities for their outstanding commitment towards creating a world freed from the threat of nuclear weapons and atomic energy.

This year, the Award jury members have selected Charmaine White Face to receive, endowed with a money purse of $10,000, the Nuclear-Free Future Award in the category of Resistance.

Educated as a biologist, Charmaine White Face is the moving spirit behind the Defenders of the Black Hills, an organization that monitors abandoned uranium mines on sacred Lakota Lands and seeks the remediation of hazardous waste ponds that contaminate the region with high levels of radium 226, arsenic, lead and iron. A central part of White Face's message is that not just the Lakota, but all of that are threatened: aquifers cover massive areas of the continent, rivers empty into one another, radioactive dust is carried by the wind, and toxic poisons in the soil nourish grass and feed crops that eventually work their way into the mainstream food chain.

Hosted by the Salzburg, Austria, state government,. the 10th annual Awards ceremony will take place in the storied Salzburg Residenz on Oct. 18. For more information, please visit www.nuclear-free.com.

Film follows Plains diet experiment

Beau LeBeau improves health with buffalo, flax, fish

By By Jarett C. Bies
Republished from the Sioux Falls Argus with permission

PORCUPINE - A new diet developed by a Rapid City doctor that focuses on traditional Lakota food and helped a Pine Ridge man lose more than 60 pounds is the focus of an upcoming documentary.

A Rapid City doctor developed the program, and it caught the interest of filmmakers Sam Hurst of Rapid City and Larry Pourier, also of South Dakota.

Their film, "Good Meat: How the Lakota Got Fat and Beau LeBeau Changed His Life," documents how LeBeau adopted "The Dakota Diet: Health Secrets from the Great Plains," a book written about a diet developed by Dr. Kevin Weiland.

The diet focuses on eating foods from this area: buffalo and wild game, fresh fish, soy and flax seed.

LeBeau has lost more than 60 pounds. "My goal isn't a weight but to be alive in 15 years," says LeBeau, 35, of Thunder Valley. "The way I was going, I wasn't going to be around much longer."

The film focuses on 200 days of LeBeau following the diet.

"The results, so far, have been shocking," Hurst says. "It's been good for his self-esteem and his knees, but it's been much more."

LeBeau is 5 feet 9 inches tall, and he weighed 333 pounds at the start. He admits he had less-than-healthy habits. "Sweets, chocolate, Snickers bars, Twin Bings, that was the hardest," LeBeau says. "I replaced them with bananas and grapes. Actually, I crave them now."

On July 3, he weighed 269 pounds, a loss of 64 pounds.

Weiland, an internal medicine doctor at the Rapid City Medical Center, says the story is more than weight loss.

"He was eating not just to lose weight, but to maintain health," Weiland says. "When we started, he couldn't run for six minutes on the treadmill."

Changing his life

Since changing his habits, LeBeau's good cholesterol numbers rose, while his bad ones dropped. Weiland says it also has helped with his diabetes and liver problems. The point isn't to be thin but to make positive changes, Weiland says.

Hurst, who has won Emmy Awards for his TV work, says making the documentary also showed him that traditional culture is returning to reservations.

As June ended, LeBeau took part in his 18th sun dance at Thunder Valley with members of his family. He felt the difference during the grueling ceremony.

"My brothers commented on how strong I looked, and I attribute that to the buffalo," he says. "They said, 'You never got weak; we were waiting for you to get weak.' I could tell I was stronger."

Native American Public Television, a component of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, provided funding for the project, Hurst says. Rapid City Medical Center, along with Weiland, who is a Madison native and an associate professor at Sanford School of Medicine, provided the health care services - estimated at $12,000 - for free.

LeBeau has received support from his girlfriend, Angie Big Crow; his stepsons Walter and Joseph; his daughter Tangerine, 17; and his son, Jeffrey, 10. He knows he'll be healthier to watch as 17-month-old daughter Trinity LeBeau grows up.

"What I did was make a choice. I hate calling it a diet. It is a way of life, a change," he says. "This change is allowing me to be here for my family."

The food

Sanaa Abourezk, owner and operator of Sanaa's 8th Street Gourmet Mediterranean restaurant in Sioux Falls, contributed recipes to Weiland for the book.

"He took an approach where he wanted gourmet cuisine that was good for the body," Abourezk says.

"It'll be good that the foods of the state get natural exposure, and to show the state is as curious, and talented, when it comes to nutrition as anywhere else."

As owner of the Lazy RRse Buffalo Ranch, Rick Knobe of Sioux Falls says the nutritional facts of buffalo's low-fat, high-in-Omega-3-fatty-acid meat are getting wider exposure.

"It is happening, but we are still a niche market," he says.

"We had a 25 percent increase in one year (in sales), but still the numbers are so small. We're not making beef people nervous."

Weiland says his diet is about creating healthy lifestyle habits that stick.

"It's a look not just at the vanity of weight loss but at the prevention of disease," he says.

Licensed nutritionist and registered dietitian Nikki Ver Steeg of Avera Heart Hospital of South Dakota says the approach makes sense.

"We don't do much in the U.S. with heritage or traditional diet, so it's fabulous to hear about this idea," she says.

"For the subject to have lost as much weight as he has, it's dramatic."

Movie release

Hurst will start crafting the narrative as the 200 days are coming to a close. The film will premiere this fall in the Black Hills, then air on public broadcasting.

"It's not a preachy movie. It's a soft-sell," he says. "You watch a man undergo change. But the lessons - if applied more widely - could change many lives, and not just on the reservation."

LeBeau hopes to inspire and has no plans to take it easy when the cameras go off.

"I went from being on the edge of being a full-blown diabetic to being healthy," he says. "I hope those who see this are inspired, especially my own people. I hope it shows it can be done."

ABOUT THE DIET

Dr. Kevin Weiland, an internal medicine doctor from Rapid City, began research on his book more than four years ago. He started with the benefits of buffalo but quickly realizing that foods from the Dakotas could form the framework of a food pyramid uniquely Midwestern.

Some of his conclusions include:

The diet is high in Omega-3 fatty acids, the good fats that help reduce bad cholesterol. They are high in foods such as buffalo meat and wild game, fresh fish, soy and flax seed.

With a focus on nutrient-dense, low-calorie foods, it gives users alternatives to poor choices.

It points out how grass-fed animals produce meat higher in iron and lower in saturated fat. Buffalo is a good example.

Barley, beans, and oats - high in soluble fiber - find their way into the diet and add needed nutrients.

Much of the diet reflects the traditional diet of the hunter-gatherer Plains Indians.

REVELATIONS DURING THE DIET

South Dakota filmmakers Sam Hurst and Larry Pourier sought to show one man's transformation when they began filming their documentary film, "Good Meat: How the Lakota Got Fat and Beau LeBeau Changed His Life."

In the months of documenting LeBeau's life change, Hurst observed:

None of LeBeau's friends or associates showed envy for his "starring" role in the film.

"There was a lot of curiosity and some hesitation, and many people said they couldn't do the same thing," Hurst says. "But there were a couple calls a week of people who wanted to join him."

Economics came into play. LeBeau was facing Type II diabetes when he started the project.

"We came to realize the cost spent to take on the diet and exercise were tiny compared to dialysis and diabetes medication," Hurst says. "And those steps, drugs especially, only mask the illness, they are not a cure."

On the reservation, food sellers rarely carry fresh fruit and vegetables, but there's never a shortage of soda.

"Imbedded in our movie are many small stories," Hurst says. "There was no diabetes on Pine Ridge in the 1970s. Now it's at 40 percent. Has anyone ever looked at how much soda is consumed there?"

LeBeau stopped drinking soda; he switched to water and tea. "People said I'd get caffeine headaches, and I thought this would be the toughest part," he says. "But I never had them."

Fitness facilities are hard to come by, and even if supplies of buffalo meat were available, storage was not.

"The center he worked out at flooded, and it was closed," Hurst says. "So now he faces a one-way, 25-mile trip to keep hitting the gym.

It's primary problems like that, and the fact that if someone were to purchase 350 pounds of buffalo meat, no one has a freezer to store it."

The buffalo on which LeBeau feasted daily is expensive in grocery stores but not for tribal members who procure the meat through the tribe. "We were able to get an entire buffalo, and have it processed, and it ended up costing about $2 per pound," Hurst says.

While deciding on a potential subject, LeBeau fit the bill on many levels, Hurst says. "He is a very spiritual person and dedicated, with a history of athletics on which to draw," he says. "He wasn't afraid of it, and he understood discipline, exercise and the traditions of his people."

Equally important, Hurst says, LeBeau is not an alcoholic, a problem that exacerbates many health issues.

Wounded Knee motorcycle memorial ride promotes awareness

By Sandra White Shield
Special to the Times

OGLALA - Bruce Hansen is enthusiastic about this year's Second Annual Wounded Knee Memorial Motorcycle Ride held July 31 to Aug. 1.

The ride starts in Ft. Yates, N.D., stops in Eagle Butte and ended at Wounded Knee on Wednesday.

The 1890 Wounded Knee route is followed as closely as possible.

Hansen said, "The purpose of the ride is to remember and honor the Lakota people who suffered and died in December 1890 at Wounded Knee."

"We feel it is important to educate and raise awareness to all people of the terrible tragedy that happened. By remembering the past and by paying our respects healing and unity can be achieved," he added.

Hansen helped coordinate the ride and said last year he was surprised at the 30 some riders who attended last year's ride and was pleased with the reception that was given the riders along the way.

Communities held ceremonies and informational events along the route. Wanblee community shared a meal and culture with the riders.

In addition to informing, riding, and healing the ride is used as a fund raiser for the Children's Village, formerly known as Wakanyeja Tiospaye O'Tipi, Inc.

PINE RIDGE - For the past 38 years Red Cloud Indian School has hosted an art show in which only Indian artists may show their work. This year's show started on June 3 and will end on Aug. 19.

Only enrolled members of tribes, 18 years of age or older, whose work was produced in the past two years may enter their pieces. Traditional arts as well as contemporary media are accepted into competition if they fit into one of the established categories.

The show, under the direction of Peter Strong, has become creative in properly showing art to the public. The show is growing by about 30 pieces a year said Strong.

The Red Cloud Art Show is one of the only places in the United States where new artist's work can show along side established artists. All stages of developing art are shown. By comparing the manner in which presentations of art are made, new artists can learn how to prepare their art for the market place.

One of the offshoots of the show is the mentoring of new artists by seasoned artists. "That's the hardest thing for new artists is that they have to be business men," said Duane Wilcox, an Oglala Lakota artist. "Be honest with yourself and do this because you like to. You won't get rich," he said.

Board vote unanimous: Caffrey should go free but parole depends on Gov. Rounds

By Peter Harriman
Sioux Falls Argus Leader

SIOUX FALLS - A Lakota man serving a sentence of life without parole could regain his freedom if Gov. Mike Rounds approves a unanimous decision from the state Board of Pardons and Paroles.

History, however, is not on inmate Timothy Caffrey's side.

The South Dakota Board of Pardons and Paroles unanimously voted last Thursday to commute Caffrey's sentence. If approved by Rounds, Caffrey would be eligible for parole within 30 days.

Caffrey

Caffrey, 44, has spent 27 years in the state penitentiary. He pleaded guilty to manslaughter after shooting and killing his adoptive father in Martin in 1981. Caffrey was 17 at the time.

Thursday's ruling was the third time the board has shortened Caffrey's sentence to make him eligible for parole.

In 1991, Gov. George Mickelson rejected the commutation because Caffrey had served only about a decade in prison. In 2003, Rounds did not act on the recommendation for eight months, then denied the commutation.

The board's recommendation Thursday followed a 30-minute hearing at the penitentiary.

"That's the first time I've seen that happen. They usually take these under consideration," Caffrey's lawyer Ron Volesky said.

Attorney General Larry Long, who prosecuted Caffrey as a state's attorney in 1981, consistently has opposed parole for him. He has recommended to Rounds that Caffrey remain in prison.

Sara Rabern, spokeswoman for Long, said he was traveling Thursday and could not be reached for comment. In January, Long said of Caffrey's prospects for parole, "Frankly, part of

Veteran's Exchange Training Service introduced at Rosebud

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - Lakota military veterans Craig Cournoyer of Wagner, Bob Dunsmore of Crow Creek and Don Two Crow of Eagle Butte arrived in the afternoon last week at the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Veteran's Affairs building to explain an innovative training program they are enrolled in out in Bedford, Mass.

The group was met by William Lanning, Compensated Work Therapy coordinator for the Black Hills VA Center, Dr. Sandra Diaz, Project Director from the Bedford VA Center in Massachusetts and Orlando Morrison, Veteran Service Office and Director of the RST Veterans Affairs program.

The group is enrolled in the Veteran's Exchange Training Service Initiative which is "a specialized rehabilitation program designed to assist Lakota veterans with psychiatric and substance abuse disorders to return to productive employment in their communities."

One of the goals of the initiative is to provide construction experience to Lakota veterans, while living and working in a vocationally enriched environment in a six to 12 month time frame. Clinical support is also provided for each veteran with the expressed goal of ultimately the new artist a way to compare their art to how seasoned people show their art, ready to sell.

Wilcox has been a part of the show off and on since 1974 and offers two pieces this year. His art depicts Native people in elongated presentations. The titles of his pieces are “Open Arms” and “Ain't Know Thing But A Chicken.”

Donel Keeler, Isanti Dakotah, submitted Good Old Buffalo Days. Keeler will show at the Northern Plains Indian Art Show this fall in Sioux Falls.

"That painting has been through a lot." he said of his submission, "It was in a fire in Lincoln, Nebraska." He said it narrowly missed being watered to death.

Keeler said that his inspiration comes from his Grandpa who used to paint a cowboy on the kick ball they had to play with.

"Then," he said, "we would kick it all the harder." Keeler went on to say that he feels he could gain some knowledge from more experienced artists about breaking into the art market and in the showing of his paintings.

The art show was the conception of Brother Simon, S.J.'s. He began the art show in 1969. In 1982 he founded the Heritage Center to house the collection of art that he had obtained since the first show. Private collectors and area families have contributed artifacts of Lakota Culture over the years. The collection is now quite large and items are rotated approximately every three years for public view.

Mary Bordeaux, curator for the collection, has been in a year long process of cataloging each item and making proper labels for them.

The show offers a unique perspective when modern art stands side by side with traditional pieces which are more than a hundred years old.

Long term goals include new and more space said Bordeaux. .

"To many visitors this is the first interaction with Lakota Culture," said Strong. One in three of the pieces entered to the show are sold but continue on display until the 19th.

The exhibit may be seen at the museum at Red Cloud School seven miles north of Pine Ridge on Highway

Prayer gathering to be held at Bear Butte during Sturgis Rally

STURGIS (AP) - A spiritual encampment at the base of Bear Butte will be held during the Sturgis Motorcycle Rally this month.

Tamra Brennan of Sturgis, a member of the working committee that is organizing the encampment, said it should not be called or considered a protest action.

``We're not going to do any marches or things like that,'' she said. ``This is not a protest at all. It's strictly a peaceful prayer camp.''

They'll pray for protection of the Butte that is held sacred by many tribes, as well as the protection of indigenous nations and their sacred sites. Prayers also will be offered for U.S. military personnel, nations that are being hurt by armed conflicts, the world's hungry, and the environmental effects of global warming.

Organizers will maintain the camp Aug. 1-12 on property owned by the Northern Cheyenne Tribe along Highway 79 on the west side of the mountain. The Sturgis rally is Aug. 6-12.

Bear Butte was the focus of protest marches and demonstrations during the motorcycle rally last year.

Participants and organizers were critical of rally-related commercial developments coming closer to Bear Butte and unsuccessfully sought restrictions on that development from the county. They also asked bikers to avoid driving to or past Bear Butte on Highway 79 to reduce noise and activities that could disturb the tranquility of the mountain and spiritual peace of worshippers.

Caffrey case

the reason we send people to the penitentiary for life is to make a statement about what they did. Part of it is simply punishment. We don't let everybody out who has been rehabilitated."

Rounds' office did not return calls Thursday for comment.

"I understand Larry's position," Volesky said. "I'm hopeful, if nothing else, he would say, 'Governor, make your decision on your own. I've given you my opinion, now I'm standing aside.' "

Volesky hopes to personally meet with Rounds soon.

Volesky said board members Thursday questioned whether there was any point in recommending a commutation for Caffrey as long as Rounds is governor and Long attorney general. Volesky said he replied, "Do what you think is right based on the record.”

"I believe minds can be changed, hearts can be changed. We are going to do everything we can to get the governor's approval."

Volesky also said a possible point in Caffrey's favor this time is that the commutation hearing was taped and will be sent to the governor, allowing him to better form an impression of Caffrey.

People testifying for Caffrey included Arnie Berkeland, a retired Sioux Falls businessman who has visited him in prison throughout his term and who has offered to sponsor him if Caffrey is granted parole.

"He is absolutely no threat to society," Berkeland said. My plans are if we ever do get him out that I and others that care for him are going to do all we can to get him going on the right path."

Berkeland said the testimony at the hearing Thursday focused on abuse Caffrey suffered at the hands of his alcoholic father "and the amount of time he has been at the penitentiary. After all, he has served 27 years. I guess I'd say he has definitely been punished for his crime."

Michelle Tyon, the Oglala Sioux Tribe's liaison to the penitentiary, also spoke on his behalf. Caffrey is a member of the tribe. He was adopted by Olive and William Caffrey as a young child. Richard Iron Cloud, of Porcupine, representing a prison advocacy group, also testified, Volesky said.

creating Native owned businesses that will increase the well-being of certain targeted Lakota reservations.

The initiative is a collaboration between the Veterans Affairs Black Hills Health Care System and the Bedford VA Medical Center and is designed to accommodate 15 veterans who are interested in a unique rehabilitation experience in a setting far different then they are accustomed to.

The construction project began 14 years ago and since then, has raised a total of $45 million in construction business. Last year they earned $5 million dollars and the hope is that such a construction effort can be brought home to South Dakota. Dunsmore said, "We will have a veteran's construction team here to get contracts and get Lakota people, themselves, working. We can build it here and keep the dollars here. We would need qualified veterans to oversee others."

Cournoyer noted that, "This is going to be a model program. The Veterans Construction Team would stay under the VA system and our salaries would come from the contracts we get."

Veterans who apply for the program must have been sober for 90 days and have some continued involvement in mental health and substance abuse treatment. The veteran does an intake evaluation with the CWT program at the Black Hills VA Center and is placed in a 30 day CWT program in South Dakota before transferring to Massachusetts.

Upon completion of 1,000 hours of supervised training each veteran receives a "VCT" certificate of completion. The program is in the process of contacting technical colleges in South Dakota to see what courses might transfer from Massachusetts in case a veteran wishes to complete more education and apprentice training before returning home.

At this point the group does not know where such a program would be located in South Dakota; however, they might work with HUD or Ellsworth Air Force if they were successful in their bid for a contract.

The concept is rather innovative in Lakota country and as a model project it would be a way for local veterans to enter the construction business and refine their skills in a variety of ways depending upon their interests.

For more information about the project, contact William Lanning of the Black Hills VA at 605-720-7305.

New Indian law question on South Dakota bar exam

PIERRE - In July, law students will tackle a new subject on the South Dakota Bar Exam.

For the first time in South Dakota history individuals who wish to practice law in South Dakota will have to demonstrate their knowledge on the basics of Indian Law and how the indigenous sovereigns within South Dakota interrelate with state and federal sovereigns.

Following the October 2006 Supreme Court Rules Hearing, the South Dakota Supreme Court voted to adopt Rule 06-71, which requires the bar exam to include one essay question on Indian Law.

Chief Justice David Gilbertson of the South Dakota Supreme Court stated, "In South Dakota today, one cannot enter and engage in the practice of law without knowledge of Indian Law. A client who seeks professional legal advice from an attorney should be confident the attorney is familiar with this increasingly important area of the law."

The Indian Law question will include basic principles of federal Indian law, including but not limited to, civil and criminal jurisdiction, the Indian Civil Rights Act, the Indian Child Welfare Act, or the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act. The question will not include the various tribal codes or customary laws.

South Dakota is the third state in the nation to add Indian Law to the bar exam. The Board of Bar Examiners is required to report back to the Supreme Court by January 1st , 2009, with an evaluation of this Supreme Court Rule.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Hello I hope all is well, today I am writing with great confusion about a few things, first of all I have a tendency to listen to my heart and sometimes block out the reality of things in life. I know there is some changes that need to be made in my life and it's causing me to be completely confused.

First I have been applying for some other jobs do you see me getting a new job soon? I also have been debating about going back to school so I can finish my degree but right now with my living situation it's a real challenge.

Do you see me going back and moving to another home?

Also I know you might think I am trying to have a lot on my plate but I have also been wondering if I am ever going to be blessed with another child soon. Is there something wrong with me so this is not happening for me, sometimes I feel like I have no luck and I am just doomed. Can you please tell me what you see for me?

With blessings: Confused

Dear Confused:

Living in your heart is the final lesson in today's world. Indeed, ever since colonization the Lakota People, who were always heart people, were forced into becoming "head" people.

This is contributory to the chaos, dissension, anger and body illness in today's world. If, in fact, you are living in your heart you are on the way to a very good life. The heart center of every person is centered in love and all that goes with that: compassion, tenderness, understanding, joyful expression, health, etc. The head gets far too worried about unnatural stresses and fears based on a reality where those fears probably will never happen.

When you live in your head there are so many possible fears, reasons why you cannot do anything because of the possible barriers (I can't go to school because I don't have enough money, I can't take that job because my family won't like it, I can't be anything that I want to be because I am not good enough) that are created in the imagination and programming offered to the modern world.

Heart people know that if what they desire is in alignment with the Creator and the highest good for themselves (in other words based on love of life and love of personal expression) they can do and have anything.

Go to school.

Fear about being over-worked is silly. You don't have to take a full load, start small and take one class. You are getting older anyway and so you might as well start working on what you want to be right now.

I don't see that you will get any of the jobs that you have applied for right now. The reason is that they are only in alignment with your pocket-book and not in alignment with what you want to do in your life to make your world a better world. It is almost mandatory that you love your work, because if you just tolerate it, it will barely tolerate you and soon all kinds of unhappy things happen.

I do see you finding different work. I would apply at a college. I see you working in that environment while you attend classes and take care of your family.

There will be another place to live for you but I feel some delay there. It probably means that other opportunities have to be opened up for family living accommodations. I believe that may be in the middle of winter.

Please don't despair and get into self-pity. Every opportunity to create a good life is within your realm. You can do anything. You are not less blessed by God than any other human being. Get into alignment with yourself. Don't make any decisions that are bad for you and start every day with a prayer of thankfulness, and your world will reflect what is truly in your heart.

It is a good thing that the Creator is smarter than humans. You can get pregnant, but I see that the choice may be delayed until you can offer another child a more secure and loving environment. That means you will just have to wait until your life is more enjoyable and secure.

In the future, I see you working in the medical field, I see a nice home, a pretty good car, food in the refrigerator, and happy children around a round table talking about their day. Life offers you many opportunities to create a life of joy so please don't be defeated by lack of progress. Just get up and get going! Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

I am writing because of my sister. She has been with a man for a good number of years and eventually they got married. A few weeks before Christmas he passed on. I would like to know if she will ever find happiness ever again? She is so lost. She does't know what to do. She has been trying to find a job and a place to live, I would like to know if she will get them? She is homeless and is having a hard time with his death. They loved each other dearly. I am worried about my sister. She has children who are all grown up. They want her to live with them but she needs to try to make it on her own. She's never had to do this before? Her husband has always taken care of her.

Worried about my sister

Dear Worried about my sister:

Oh dear. Your sister is lost in grief. She will recover but she could use some help. When this soul-mate of hers left, he did not bargain for her to quit living too.

Her grief is not for him - she knows he is okay, it is for herself. She is afraid that she cannot make it without him and that fear is holding her back. I know she misses him. I know she cannot sleep. I know she isn't eating right, and I also know that her husband's spirit is upset with her for not honoring his life in a good way and going forward.

She will be okay eventually. She will find another mate and live in what looks like the Black Hills. She will go back to school and work at doing a lot of writing. God never gives us more than we can handle. Death is a shock for those left behind, but it is not punishment - it is transformation.

As I have said before, a Lakota medicine man once told me that before the Europeans came to this country the Lakota never grieved for their dead. They honored them because they knew that where they went was the best possible place to be.

Your sister does need some help from family members. She does need some honest to goodness help with the death of her husband, and she does need to be reminded that the best way to honor her husband's life is to live a good life in his honor.

She will be okay. Just keep loving her and remind her that her pity is self-centered It is not based on the suffering of her husband, but on her own suffering. It is now not an honoring, it is self-indulgent and a dishonor to his spirit. That sounds cruel, but it is fact and it may help bump her back into life.

Dear Anna,

Can you see me graduating? Do you see at least one of these guys in my future? One is a bull rider, one is a tribal cop and one just graduated as a college class valedictorian.

Just wondering

Dear Just Wondering:

A smorgasbord of men huh? You better graduate and you better keep going to school or you will lose out on the opportunity of finding a man with a brain.

The bull rider is very sexy - but he drinks. Want that? The tribal cop is very strong in what he desires in a mate, he has a lot of girl friends because he is shopping around for the right one, and unfortunately, dear one, you are not the one he wants to spend his life with. You can spend some time with him, but there is another woman for him. The valedictorian? He wants to and will leave this area to pursue his education in a more sophisticated area. I believe that he wants to get his masters and his doctorate. I don't see him as planning to build his life right now around a woman; rather he wants to build his life around what he develops with his own skills and talent. You had better learn from his example.

Please refocus your attention on what you want to do with your own life or you will be a huge stone around the neck of an ambitious man. You are headed to try and please a mate without developing who you are. Then the man will dump you, then you will have to struggle to support yourself and your children while going to school. Please change this by taking care of yourself and your education. Spending your free time sleeping with a variety of men does not enhance your future.

Take your brain out (which is quite good), dust it off, plan your future as a responsible human being, and go girl! You will meet the right man in about three and a half to four years from now.

ROSEBUD COMPREHENSIVE HEALTHCARE FACILITY

IMPORTANT FACTS ABOUT CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICES

Contract Health Services (CHS) are services provided by private Doctors and hospitals when Rosebud IHS is unable to provide the emergency and/or specialty care. If you have questions, please contact Contract Health Services at (605) 747-3239.

IHS-CHS coverage is not automatic

IHS-CHS coverage is for emergent, life-threatening situations only. Sore throats, ear aches, medicine refills etc. are not considered emergent or life-threatening. Should you have a healthcare emergency requiring you to obtain care at a non-IHS facility, you must notify the CHS office within 72 hours. If you fail to notify CHS, you will be held responsible for the bill. If you visit a non-IHS facility, you MUST sign a Release of Information to provide this information to the CHS office. The CHS committee cannot make a decision without sufficient medical information.

IHS-CHS will not cover a visit if an IHS facility would have been closer except in an emergency

As a general rule, routine health services will not be provided through CHS when an IHS facility capable of providing these services is within 90 minutes one-way surface transportation time from the person's place of residence until level of IHS funding permits a less restrictive guideline.

IHS-CHS approval

Please do not request preauthorization from the Indian Health Service. The CHS Committee must review all referrals and call-in requests. The Committee approves or disapproves the referrals based on medical facts presented and whether criteria have been met. The IHS-CHS Committee is the only authority to approve or disapprove

IHS-CHS is the Payor of Last Resort

This simply means that if other resources are available and assessable, it is mandatory that you apply and utilize the resource. Examples of alternate resources include Medicare, Medicaid, Veterans Healthcare, CHAMPUS, private insurance, workmen's compensation etc. If alternate resources are not approved, the alternate resource denial letter needs to be brought into the CHS Office for records. You may contact the Patient Benefits Coordinator at (605) 747-3213 to assist in application process.

IHS-CHS needs bills presented to the CHS office

If you receive a bill for a service approved through Contract Health Services you must bring or fax it to the CHS office in a timely manner. If mailing or personally delivering the bill, please make sure it is opened. Due to postal regulations we are unable to open mail personally addressed to you. If you prefer to fax it the CHS office the direct fax number is (605) 747-5917.

8th Year of Severe Drought Conditions on Pine Ridge Reservation

Our department would like to remind the Oyate of the Pine Ridge Reservation that we are entering our 8th year of drought conditions. The weather has been kind lately, but we know it will heat up very quickly and every drop of water is precious.

Be Water-Wise Outdoors

- Try watering lawns in the early morning or late afternoon to prevent evaporation and scorching of the grass during mid-day sun.
- Try not to water on windy days
- Try using drip irrigation for your lawns. Saves 75% more water than s prinklers by limiting evaporation.
- Over-watering can cause fungus to form brown patches on lawns.
- Water lawns and shrubs once every five days to promote longer stronger roots.
- When mowing try keeping grass 3 inches long to help in moisture absorption.
- Keep swimming pools covered to stop debris and to help prevent evaporation.
- Try backwashing your swimming pool's filter weekly to help keep the water clean.
- Clean feet before entering pool.
- Make sure all livestock watering devices have an adequate float system that does not leak.
- Report all yard hydrant and thermo-line leaks to proper authorities.

Be Water-Wise Indoors

- Report all leaking bathroom and kitchen fixtures.
- When washing clothes use the right water setting for the load.
- Listen for toilet constantly running or filling when not in use (a leaky toilet can account for up to 1400 gallons of water lost per day, while the average household uses only 350 gallons per day.)
- A leaking toilet can cause your septic system to back up because of over saturation.
- Try using low flow toilets (1.5 to 2 gallons per flush), old toilets use up to 5 gallons per flush.
- Don't use your toilet as a garbage disposal.
- Turn off water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing dishes.
- Take fast showers instead of baths.
- Use low flow fixtures in baths and kitchens.
- An Ultra low flow showerhead uses 1.5 gallons per minute, while conventional showerheads can use up to 5 gallons per minute.

What's in that Big Mac?

Left: Elaine Yellow Horse presented on tips of cooking hamburger, which is a popular meat because it is affordable. It is healthier to buy lean hamburger but sometimes that isn't affordable so one should rinse their hamburger with hot water before cooking which will help cleanse the fat particles. Yellow Horse shows the difference in the fat drained from (left) lean hamburger to (right) regular hamburger. Right: Daverine Elk shows shoppers how much fat and carbohydrates are in different fast foods. The fat and carbs are measured in clear plastic baggies. With this presentation, one can clearly see the amount of fat and carbs consumed when one eats a McDonald's Big Mac, large French fries and a large coke, 55 grams of fat and 202 grams of carbs. Another favorite is two slices of Pepperoni pan pizza, two breadsticks, five hot wings and a large Pepsi, adding up to 57 grams of fat and 414 carbs. She also presented how one ounce of Cheetos and a can of Coke contain 10 grams of fat and 52 carbs as compared to baked Cheetos and a can of diet Coke which adds up to 5 grams of fat and 19 grams of carbs.

PINE RIDGE - Customers shopping at Sioux Nation Store not only got store bargains but were able to participate in a tour of information regarding how to cook and buy healthy foods for their families.

Shoppers who participated in the health fair, filled out a survey that had pre and post questions about different foods such as fats, grains and reading food labels.

Shoppers were taken on a tour through the store and stopped at six different booths, where presenters not only showed the participants good food and bad food but labeled the foods ingredients to give a better example of high fat and sugar content.

Staff of the Indian Health Service's diabetes prevention program Oyate Wicozani Ocanku coordinated the health fair with other tribal organizations with booths that had outstanding information on how to buy, eat, and cook healthy.

OST Childcare staff manned a booth that made delicious fruit smoothies that are healthier for children. All of the booths with free healthy snacks and food samples gave away recipes and brochures. Using proper food serving sizes for babies, children and adults as well as adding the easy exercise of walking was another booth well liked by participants.

Judiciary Committee looking to improve OST Public Safety Charter

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "We need to make some changes, the judiciary committee is forced to deal with a lot of issues involving the tribe's Department of Public Safety," said Garfield Little Dog, chairman of the judiciary committee and tribal council representative from Wounded Knee District, "there are a number of people looking at revising or redoing the public safety charter including Steve Sandven, a past OST Attorney General and tribal attorney for Sisseton Wahpeton and Public Safety themselves who are represented by Patty Marks."

According to Little Dog, the judiciary committee is hosting a meeting in Rapid City on Thursday, Friday and Saturday to review work and proposals on the charter to gain some consensus in preparation for the scheduled special session of the tribal council at the casino on Wednesday focusing on the charter. Thursday and Friday morning are scheduled for charter while Friday afternoon and Saturday morning are set to focus on the tribe's domestic violence code. The administration of public safety, their attorney and top officers were in Rapid City on Wednesday to prepare for both the upcoming judiciary committee meeting and the council meeting.

"We are most concerned about the roles and responsibilities of a proposed board of directors," said James Twiss, chief of police, "we aren't tied to any particular number whether its three, five or nine but more concerned about the power they will have whether they have the power to fire even after a grievance board has reviewed the circumstances and made recommendations."

Little Dog and the judiciary committee have been looking at a five member board not just for public safety but also for Housing.

"We have seen too many instances where you have a nine member board, one representative from each district and the board gets territorial and forgets to look out for the

Badly needed 100 unit Mission housing development to be dedicated Aug. 16

MISSION. - A dedication and ribbon-cutting ceremony celebrating the completion of a badly needed 100-unit housing development in Mission on the Rosebud Reservation will be held at the complex at 11 a.m. on Thursday, Aug. 16. A pow-wow celebrating the new housing complex will follow at 12:30 p.m.

A staggering 6,000 families have been on a waiting list for the $10.3 million Sunrise III Townhomes, which consist of 60 two-bedroom and 40 three-bedroom townhouse units within 10 buildings. The units will be rented to households with incomes at 40 percent, 50 percent and 60 percent of the area median income.

The completion of Sunrise III Townhomes brings the number of units in the Mission housing complex to 168. Sioux Falls-based Costello Companies, developer and manager of Sunrise III, built the 44-unit Sunrise I Townhomes in 1993 and added a second 24-unit complex three years later.

CitiHousing, Inc., a subsidiary of Citibank (South Dakota), N.A., has invested $7.2 million in the project, and Citi in total invested more than $9 million. Sunrise III's total development cost was financed with housing tax credits issued by the South Dakota Housing Development Authority and purchased by CitiHousing, Inc.; a $1 million USDA Rural Development Section 515 loan, and a conventional loan financed by Citibank. Construction financing was provided by Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., and Citibank. The owner is Sunrise III Limited Partnership, in which Costello Investments, LLC is the general part-

Lakota Women for Change plan to celebrate RST secretarial election

Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - A portion of the membership of the Lakota Women for Change met at the Rosebud Sioux tribal council chambers on Sunday, Aug. 12 to discuss plans to hold a celebration. The recently concluded RST secretarial election was the culmination of many years of dedicated commitment which the LWFC had advocated for.

The group which had its genesis in the 1990s first met at the Lakota Studies building on the campus of Sinte Gleska University. They discussed what was occurring with tribal council business, kids in the community and other issues which were confronting Sicangu society. They apparently did not have a strategy in place to address what they were observing, but would subsequently identify educating Lakota people about the need for responsible government and good leadership as a goal.

The group has had a diverse group of Native women over the years, and at present do not have a charter of any kind, but hope to apply for non-profit status with a tribal corporate charter. They have done some fundraising in the form of bake sales, Indian taco sales and rummage sales. They do not get any set donations, but have located an organization that may entertain a proposal for donations.

The LWFC identified three junctures at which they attempted to call for a constitutional convention in which their vision was the convergence of Sicangu people to sit down and discuss those proposed amendments which would make the quality of life better for the community. Each time their attempt failed as signatures were invalidated for one reason or another. The third attempt was successful as the RST council assembled a secretarial election task force.

It was a historic event as the Rosebud Sioux are the only tribe which allows the people to call for such a constitutional convention. The LWFC had to collect signatures from 30 percent of the tribal members who had voted in the last election.

The RST constitutional task force was appointed from a list of names submitted included, Dr. Ed Valandra, Ron Neiss, Linda Marshall, Duane Hollow Horn Bear, Lynette Marshall and Eric Nixon.

When testimony was taken from tribal members and properly documented by the task force, many proposed amendments emerged in the final form. The 27 amendments which were finally accepted by the Bureau of Indian Affairs became a source of contention as many were redundant, poorly written and legally unsound according to the LWFC.

They noted that the RST council or the BIA could have provided technical assistance or funds to educate the community about the amendments but that did not occur because they were not asked.

Attorney and LWFC member, Vi Burnette said, "We are most proud that this was the people's initiative and not the tribal council's or the Lakota Women for Change's." Dorothy Marshall said, "We were not aware of how this should proceed. All the people should have come together to discuss the proposed amendment and then re-written them."

Once the task force took testimony from tribal members and they were examined by the Aberdeen Area Office, the amendments were supposed to be properly re-written. However, that did not occur. Lois Antoine of Antelope community said, "We wanted each amendment to reflect the opinion of the person who drafted it." One problem which hindered the re-writing of the amendments in time for the election was the fact that the original proposer's names were not accessible.

Now that the RST secretarial election has concluded, tribal voters had until the past Monday to contest any of the amendments. One challenge to the election apparently originated from a member of the RST council and will apparently be properly addressed.

In the meantime, the Lakota Women for Change are planning to celebrate their dedicated efforts to make the RST secretarial election a reality. The dates and time for such a celebration will be announced at a later date.

Dreamer, Garnett, Yellow Boy, Steele, Chief Eagle win fight debuts

STURGIS - The Pine Ridge Rez Rumblerz MMA club took their show on the road last Friday competing in the Busted Knuckle Fight Club's annual showdown at the Busted Knuckle Saloon. Chance Chief Eagle weighed in at 270 pounds for his match against 295 pound 6'5" biker known as Big Mike. Chance took Big Mike out in the third round with an eye-popping wicked right for his first win of his fight career.

"It was like watching a great white shark attacking a helpless baby seal," said Dave Michaud while watching Ruth Dreamer take out Angeline Parsons in 14 seconds, "this was Ruth's first competition and she came out on the fight and gave her opponent no chance of responding."

Dreamer watched an event earlier this year and decided that she would like to try it out. Parsons, from Paducah, Ken., was five inches taller and 20 pounds heavier than Dreamer but the edge with a capital E went to Dreamer.

Carl Garnett entered his first fight at 135 pounds and took out 170 pound John Wilkes of Las Vegas, Nev. in the third round with a guillotine choke hold. Eric Yellow Boy, another new Mixed Martial Arts(MMA) fighter for the Rez Rumblerz beating a local favorite from Newell in the third.

Josh Steele, a boxer, tried his hand at MMA also and won all three rounds against Pete Kilpatrick of Alberta, Canada. Sam Bravo lost in Rapid City last week and found himself paired up with undefeated Charley Buddah Stevens. Bravo took his frustration out on the Las Vegas fighter taking him out in the first round with a rear naked choke hold to end the fight. Arlin Rowland fought at 170 pounds and ahead in the match midway through the third period got sick from a stomach virus and lost out.

The club will have fighters participating in Ringwars 17 in Rapid City Sept. 15.

Being a foster grandparent can make a difference in the life of a child

HOT SPRINGS - A new school year is about to start. Some of the children will be anxious to get back again. Many enjoy the challenge and excitement of learning new things. What about the children who struggle in school both academically and/or socially? Teachers try very hard to make children feel comfortable in the school environment, but students who have struggled in earlier years have a hard time believing that this year will be any different. This is where volunteers with the Foster Grandparent Program can really make a difference.

Imagine being a kid who is struggling with reading, dreading another school year. As you walk in the door, who is waiting for you inside the classroom but a grandma or grandpa type person just waiting to help you with a successful year? This is a person who is willing to give their time so you will feel the joy of learning in school; someone who could be fishing, knitting, playing cards or a million other things instead of helping you, but they chose you. Do you think that would change your attitude towards school?

The Foster Grandparent Program has already changed the lives of many children in the exact scenario as above. Foster Grandparents have been seen with many a joyful tear as the students they work with reach grade level performance and beyond. If you are 60 years of age or more, physically able, and would be willing to give 15 or more hours a week in a classroom, center based Head Start, or a non-profit daycare, you could be one who finds immeasurable joy knowing you helped a child break through the struggles to experience success in school.

Foster Grandparents receive a small, tax-free stipend which covers the costs of volunteering as well as mileage reimbursement. They receive training, orientation, earn vacation and sick time and recognition. Foster Grandparents also make many new friends at one-a-month trainings with their peers. T hey share experiences and tips to help each other in their respective assignments. The director and coordinator is a constant support to them by answering questions or concerns. You are needed, so please consider being a Foster Grandparent for the coming school year. You can call Darbi Cram at 1-877-613-4016, 347-4467 or Deb Russell at 745-3408 for more information or an enrollment form.

"This funding will create more resources for Oglala women who may be experiencing domestic violence. Cangleska's efforts on the Pine Ridge Reservation and around Rapid City have already offered a safe place for women, it is my hope this funding will continue that work and expand the help available to victims of domestic violence." Words from the 'trenches'

Healthy lessons in stolen muffins

Connie Smith-Blanco

I thought I had heard everything about healthy living and eating (and thinking) but the ladies at the Indian Health Service Diabetes Program, and the other wellness programs they partnered with last week, were still able to teach this old dog a few new tricks. They got together in the middle of a grocery store in Pine Ridge, and created a really unique, fun, learning experience.

Amanda and I arrived in the afternoon with camera and notebook in hand and after being greeted and signed in we were handed a survey and a pencil and whisked away on their magical tour with adults and children of all ages.

It was a tour of eye-opening demonstrations, facts, and easy to remember and understand visual presentations.

Each participating program had a small table filled with healthy ideas and alternatives to high fat and sugar filled foods that are so easy to buy and give to ourselves and our families.

The tour showed participants that healthy choices don't have to be boring or expensive and could really make a difference in your health.

We started off learning to make real fruit smoothies that were could be made with fresh, frozen or canned fruit and they tasted delicious.

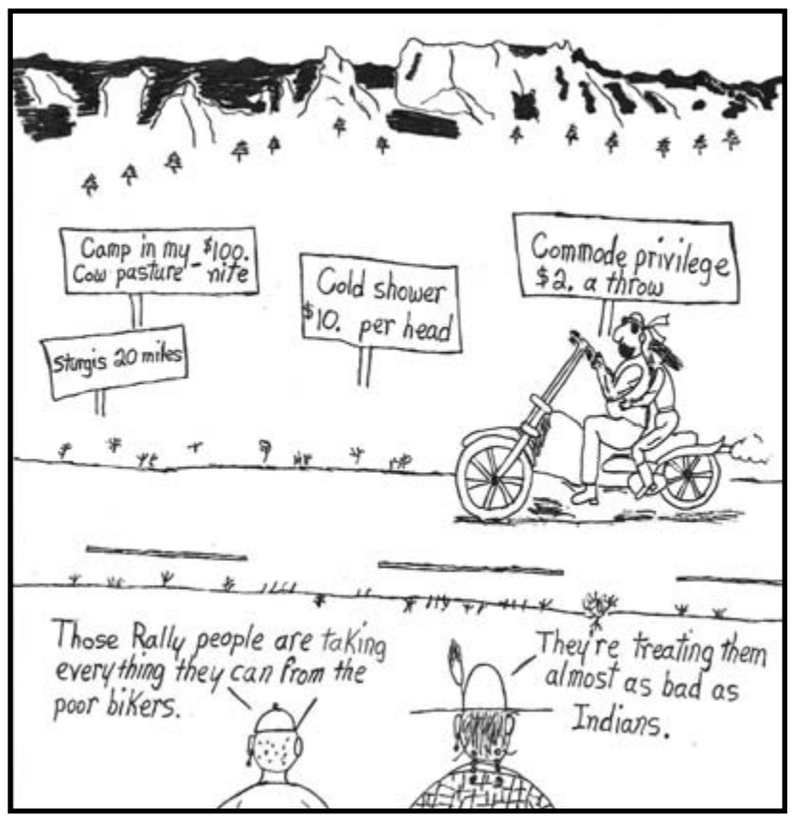
We moved on to demonstrations of the high fat and sugar content in everyday fast food items like whoppers, French fries, Indian tacos. We could clearly see how much fat and sugar were in some of these foods because they used clear baggies labeled to show the fat and salt accumulation and that looked pretty fatty to me. They compared a healthy alternative food with their results marked on it's baggie with the baggie of unhealthy food results. Seeing them side by side showed us what these foods put into our bodies.

We learned that lean hamburger is the healthier thing to buy and cook. But if you can't afford it the alternative is to rinse the meat in hot water 'before' cooking it and afterward drain the remaining fat and throw it away.

Chips were not so bad if you make the right choice to buy baked chips instead of fried. There were examples of baked chips and crackers that were just as delicious as their fried cousins. The ugly baggies of fat and sugar showed up at the cooking oil table, showing us the evil of lard and butter. I learned if the cooking grease is hard at room temperature it's also hard on your heart and your body. We were shown plenty of examples of healthier choices like vegetable and olive cooking oil.

We learned to read labels and discover what is really in some of the food that we buy and take for granted is nutritious for our families.

Reading food labels and understanding their meaning can mean life or death if you're someone with diabetes.



Highly processed and sugared breakfast cereals were shown to be taboo but again we saw healthy alternatives that children and adults would find tasty.

Two big eye openers was seeing all the sugar in regular soda and learning correct portion sizes as well as what goes in those portions. Pick a plate no larger than a paper plate and divide it in half, with vegetables or salad filling the top half. Divide the bottom half with equal portions of meat and fruit.

Amanda and I enjoyed learning about whole grains and selecting healthy bread for our families.

We learned another lesson too, whole grain muffins are delicious! We liked the muffins so much I grabbed one for each of us to try. As we whispered about how delicious they were, the nutritionist explained to the children nearby that she cooked 'many' muffins so that she could cut them into smaller portions for everyone to enjoy. We finished the last of our stolen muffins, and for the record, those were really great tasting whole grain muffins!

We returned our surveys and were rewarded with more goodies, but this time we waited for the goodies to be handed to us. Never be embarrassed about learning new healthy eating habits, just ask us, here in the trenches.

Finding My Voice

Oprah: life has to be easy when you have money

Dana Badmilk

Oh Oprah...I have criticized you in the past...mainly for giving advice on parenting....when you have no kids.

And marriage...when you are not.

And heartbreak...when you are happy.

And life, dieting, dress, make-up, pets...everything under the moon you know about. You probably know if a cow really jumped over the moon.

Anyway I apologize for my critique in the past of your life.

I mean...I can't hold it against you that you know EVERYTHING!

I mean...

HELLO!

For real real, if I had a handsome man like yours....why marry him? He isn't going nowhere.

Not when you have a gaboobazillion dollars.

Shoot it must be easy to tell people how to diet, eat right, and exercise...when you have your own personal chef, personal trainer, and life coach. Can't forget the golden Nikes.

Must be easy to tell people that if you feel good on the inside...you look great....especially when you have your own hair stylist and make-up artist.

And the way your yappy little pups have their own nanny...can't be much different than kids. Go ahead and tell people how to raise their kids!

And tell us how to shop and "save" money on a skirt that is only $300.00. I mean seriously, I know your personal shopper must know where all the bargains are. (By the way, this would be my dream job. I can hit every clearance rack at every discount store and being the true Lakota woman I am...I have ended up at more than one birthday party thinking it was a yard sale because of the balloons.)

Tell us to have self esteem like you. I mean after all your magazine has been going for well over 5 years and not one other person has ever been on the cover....except.....you.

Life has got to be good and easy when you have a gaboobazillion dollars. So go on with your bad self...tell us how to live it to the fullest.

Just can't guarantee I will listen.

Cuz I got like $20 I have to plan my next three meals on for four kids.

Lessons learned from brother Carl

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

There were seven of us brothers and coming from a family of ten we were immensely proud that we were all intact despite living on the Rosebud for all of these years.

The statistics have been dismal when it comes to per capita income, deaths from motor vehicle accidents, unemployment, etc. Well, you know the story.

We managed to stay intact and alive up until a couple of years ago, when brother Harvey died.

Last week our second to the oldest brother, Carl, died in Farmington, N.M. We are down to the eight of us and the rule of depletion is starting to apply to us.

What was most interesting is that Carl sent each one of us a form letter in which he lectured us about the need to get along as a family and not to be so sensitive dated July 20.

He said that we all needed to get along and if we did not, then something bad might happen to one of us.

I don't know how much of a coincidence his letter was, but Carl's passing or spiritual journey happened much to close to the date of the letter for my comfort.

Our family grew up during the very tough economic times of the 1950s and social turmoil of the 1960s and emotionally we just did not bond very well. We were also a product of the stoicism that seemed to characterize Lakota people of early generations.

Some of it was due to the missionary influence as we never learned to be touchy feely as they say.

In his later years, I believe Carl was reaching out to his family to try to retrieve or experience some of that emotional bonding and intimacy that we all never experienced as a family unit.

It was funny though, as Carl did not like crowds or would never lead the family in celebrations of holiday dinners, but it seems like it was something he longed for as evidenced by his letter. One time I and Beaux invited him for lunch because he helped us haul a metal gate but he never showed.

Having grown up in a rough and tumble way, that lifestyle carried over into his adult life and I have to say that Carl was the kind of guy who would take all of us on an emotional roller coaster ride. He was my mother's favorite son, I believe, and his wake and funeral was a very trying experience for the whole family, especially our mother.

As they say, parents should never be put into a situation where they are burying their children.

It is too much of a strain on parents when that occurs and I hope never to be put in that predicament.

Farewell, Carl Dwayne, you taught a lesson in death that we may or may not heed, but nevertheless your legacy and good memories will never die.

Dr. Archie Beauvais, (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and currently works as the director of the Lakota language preservation project for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. Functionally fluent in the Lakota language, Dr. Beauvais continues to pursue a professional interest that is forever enlightening.

Time to dispel corruption

Dear Editor:

The time has finally come to address and dispel the corruption that exists in our society when nobody says anything, everybody seems to stray, even if it is at the expense of another. Some may feel they will get away with it, but they never do!

Every summer we celebrate with pow wows, family gatherings, or just common social practices. Yet, even these sacred customs have failed to become the epitome of our identity not prosperity. Anymore our Lakota customs have become that of legendary exhibits, displayed for money and prestige. Ask any dancer, what is the story they are telling with their dance?

With this world forever spiraling down, it seems ignorance has enabled character to become somewhat of a hypocrite. And to top it off, our society exhibits prejudice and animosity towards one another. Our prejudices are not racial, because we tend to give to others before we think of our family.

God our father advised our grandfathers of old that we needed to quit being so insatiable or we would become a loathsome society. Including fighting amongst each other and spoiling our children. You have to wonder why grandmothers enable and pout so much.

People tend to not think things over, but just act, so procedure becomes a substantial tragedy. Others, may just go and do, just so the job is done, which usually will cost money to go back and repair. It is through these noticeable procedures, that only a few are involved, with thousands of others waiting for results. Sadly, relatives, favoritism and/or drinking partners are in place of these decisions. When questions are asked, you get barked at.

All and all, this is the reality and style tribal organizations function. Trumped up committees, and boards with all the same interest, power to control. Sadly, leadership is weak, so they walk and accountability is nil! Misappropriation is a norm. If you are part of it, or know something is wrong but let it go, you have a job. No ethics.

Tribal organizations under the I.R.A. government usually hire people that are very unsociable or incompetent, so that way they don't have any trouble with mismanagement. There are directors who hire family and relatives because of their illegal procedures. Even travel has been manipulated with program funds. Back in the 1700 and 1800s there was a book published concerning the I.R.A. government, and with all it sanctions it was stated that the Lakota had become an adultress tribe. Running off with soldiers and as a result the Lakota man getting killed.

Well, recently an investigation was done by some grass root Lakotas and this behavior still exists. Infidelity and illegitimacy are factor roles in this behavior.

And some have derived from relationships exposed in Tribal Programs. Really pitiful, yet babies being born and brought into a failing system where there is no good health and corrupted entities.

These, spoken of, may or may not exist in all the organizations, but surprisingly, only time will tell. The only good in this, which is not! The United States is fitting this bill, while they turn a blind eye to the cries.

Cries that will come back and haunt them through terrible pestilence. Same thing the I.R.A. government will suffer for turning a deaf ear to the people they should of served!

The only service that is done for the people of God, is the humility to endure the sadistic actions to our mothers on Treaty land, violating a legislative act of 1888 and 1933. Gross violations. Federal officials have turned a blind eye to all misappropriated dollars, this is done to cover up all the money pocketed to the Tribe. Who will be the scapegoat?

Applying for a job has become a manipulated pattern of how much you know, who you know, and how close are you related to the boss. We have seen how program directors have the final say as to who works and who doesn't. We've seen how they pushed out effectiveness to make room for immediate family members. In the same note, ethical workers have been terminated because of contention with mismanagement.

Although some were strong enough to walk away, and tell their story, sadly no one has been effective enough to fix these atrocities that exist in the I.R.A. government.

Inequity seems to be a pattern of norm, even in our educational systems. These organizations are also family run. What makes some people think they are God's gift to education. One particular school which needs mentioning, but I won't, have violated every atrocity spoken of. Student progress, as well as attendance can verify this. Corruption, nepotism, favoritism and once again illegitimacy have revolved around this program.

Money laundering, employee violations, need I go on? Mind you, there are good people that work and do their job. It's just the people in their offices that can't.

Our education organizations need to contend with state mandates.

As it is the governor stated he didn't want any dealings with the tribe.

Some of our officials have become dependant on them, so they go on. Our schools need to sit down and organize a curriculum that will be nationally and internationally approved. Think of all the advantages, the state can cram it!

Another very spiritual inequity is housing. Very critical area that has been mismanaged and misappropriated. And to save a few bucks, cheap labor. We have professional builders here in the tribe. Very accurate workers, but I have not seen them. Word is someone else got hired over the. A relative to someone in the housing. Look out your window you'll see them cruising by in a housing truck. OST Housing has now spent twice or thrice the amount on homes that have not passed inspection. When one worker was asked what the on-center of a partition was, they had no idea. When asked if they counter-sink their screws, they responded by "the counters are all glued." At least he knew something.

I know housing workers are not following codes. We got contractors that will even use weathered pipes to get the job done. A week later, busted pipes. Electrical wires, no conduits, so one spark, no home. It gets better! A lot of wasted material, so housing has to dig around for funding. They need accountability, not pity! There is a cover up in this program, so even homes have been misappropriated to committee family members, even to some with no income! If a tornado or tragedy happens, right away they will retaliate without ever knowing the reason why!

Looking back and taking on inventory of tribal housing and education, one can realize the sore cursing, they have inhibited toward the Lakota Society. Some of these families involved have seen the tragedy involved with family, but fail to see the reason why. Sadly they have taken life for granted through silly traditional practices. Must be a mental defect!

You have to ask yourself, "Is this selfishness worth my inheritance in God's Kingdom?" Why does one become so selfishly connected, even when it takes the health and lives of loved one. The I.R.A. government has so much to gain serving the great Sioux Nation, yet they promote bondage, which will not go well if it fails. See you later, cousin!

I never do see I.R.A officials going to the people for their needs.

They only use outdated census, which was never enough in the first place.

If everyone knew the statistics and how they were obtained, we'd have something to laugh about.

Spiritually speaking we are not getting anywhere. And if we do finally get there, it'll probably be all destroyed. If anyone knows about the final dispensation, they can relate with all the destruction arising everywhere.

The cold reality of dispensation is it will sneak up on you, or take you off guard if you don't know the signs to come. Because of inheritance our blood is stained on the land.

As Lakotas we suffered tremendously where we shouldn't have.

We are taken advantaged of on all levels of proficiency to establish a so called democratic government. Let's get real.

Notes From Indian Country

By any other name spin is still spin

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

I don't know about you, but I am having a hard time distinguishing between "spin" and "euphemism." For example, the Bush Administration calls the rise in the number of troops in Iraq a "surge" and the mainstream media falls in line with this spin to parrot what is clearly an "escalation."

And then when another 20,000 troops are sent in at a later date they are referred to as "non-surge troops." Should the MSM have called this what it really is; further escalation? Does this mean that the "non-surge troops" are not in harms way?

The initial attack against the sovereign nation of Iraq was called a "pre-emptive strike." Wasn't this really an act of military aggression? If the press had been doing its job shouldn't it have asked the all-important question, "What was pre-empted?"

Now the Bush administration is saying that the surge is working. Did they determine this because fewer American soldiers and Marines were killed in the month of July than in the previous seven months of 2007? News stories report that 25, 50, or 100 Iraqis are dying by suicide bombers, or are dragged from their homes in the middle of the night and executed nearly every single day. According to an article in Newsweek, 1,652 civilians died in July alone. No matter how many Iraqis die is the surge still working?

The Bush Administration and the MSM call those attacking the American troops "insurgents." I believe that in any other war they would have been called "guerillas." And the mayhem they wreak on each other is called "secular violence." Shouldn't "secular violence" be called a "civil war?"

Americans have a strange way of using metaphors or euphemisms that are often racial in content. For instance, when someone does something outlandish they are said to be "off the reservation." As the American troops waited to start the attack against Saddam's troops in the first Gulf War, they looked out into the night at the vast desert in front of them and called it "Indian country."

When covering up a lie a white person puts his hand behind his back, crosses his fingers, and says, "honest Injun." The inference here is that all Indians are dishonest. When a white man lived with an Indian woman he was known as a "squaw man." If he lived with an Irish woman he wasn't called an "Irish man." I've seen the word "squaw" and "squaw man" used over and over in Western movies. To nearly every Native American woman in this country the word squaw is the equivalent of whore or worse. Squaw was often used by the white man as a reference to the private parts of an Indian woman.

The point I am trying to make here is that language can be used as an honest spin to cover a dishonest act, it can be used to make something that is a disaster appear to be a winning proposition or it can be used to make an escalation in warfare appear to be a push forward, a surge.

I think it is important for the mainstream media to look at the words presented to them by any administration, words often intended to put a spin on truth or reality, and analyze those words to determine their true meaning and then once that is done, totally refrain from using them in news stories because when you do, you are lending credence to words of deception.

If a surge is an escalation, or secular violence is civil war and a pre-emptive strike is an unwarranted attack upon another nation, say so and please stop being a tool for those who would use words to promote an unjust cause. Get some spine.

I think the word "spin" was created by the advertising agencies, but its method was too readily picked up by politicians looking for ways to bend the truth. Its continued use and growth casts a bad reflection upon this country. What does America stand for? In the movie Judgment at Nuremberg, Spencer Tracy, in the role of the judge describes America as a land that honors, "Justice, truth and the value of a single human being." How far has America wandered from those ideals in the name of spin?

Law suit filed against IHS doctor for sexual contact

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - A civil lawsuit filed in 2005 by a Pine Ridge woman accusing an Indian Health Services doctor of sexual contact is moving closer to trial.

Tamara Star Comes Out, who also goes by Tamara Starr, brought the complaint in against Dr. Mohammad Ahsan of Ohio.

The other original defendant, VISTA Staffing Solutions Inc. of Salt Lake City, has since been removed from the case filed in U.S. District Court in Rapid City. VISTA provided Ahsan to the hospital as a temporary physician.

Star Comes Out said she went to the IHS hospital in Pine Ridge Nov. 24, 2004, seeking treatment for abdominal pain.

During an examination, Ahsan pulled up her blouse and touched her inappropriately, questioned if she was married and had children and asked if she would return to see him, according to the lawsuit.

"The physical touching by defendant Ahsan was not related to any legitimate medical purpose, nor was it necessary for treatment or diagnosis by plaintiff," the complaint states.

Star Comes Out was "disturbed and upset, she felt like crying and felt 'dirty,' and had difficulty sleeping," according to the document. The incident caused her to have bouts of crying, anxiety, nightmares, nausea and loss of appetite, it stated.

The four-count complaint accuses Ahsan of battery and intentional infliction of mental distress and seeks financial compensation, punitive damages and other costs, all to be determined at a jury trial.

Lawyers received a sixth delay in the case last month but the motion indicates they are nearly done taking the depositions needed for the lawsuit to proceed, including several from IHS employees taken in June.

Attorneys have until October to file all motions.

Sandra Black Bear candidate for RST vice president

ROSEBUD - Sandra Black Bear, who comes from a well-known and prominent family on the Rosebud reservation has announced her intention to run for the office of the vice-president of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. The RST primary election will be held on Aug. 23.

Black Bear's parents are the late Ben W. Black Bear, Sr. and Iva M. Lone Dog Black Bear. As a lifelong resident on the Rosebud she has a vested interest in the welfare of the people and her personal history and involvement at home would fill volumes.

She has worked in the educational system since 1974 and her places of employment include, Rosebud Elementary, St. Francis High School and middle school, Parmelee Head Start Woksape Woihanble center where she watched as the 2006-07 class graduated. She was also employed at Sinte Gleska University for ten years.

As a traditional Lakota woman, Black Bear practices wowaunsila, being compassionate and helpful, as well as wawokiye - using generosity everyday.

Sandra Black Bear

She also possesses woksape - the wisdom of knowing and understanding the needs of people through being a good listener. She said, "I can find answers. I worked in the Kindle administration from 1999-2003 and was chosen because of my communication skills with the Lakota Oyate."

Black Bear sincerely believes that her education, experience and Lakota way of life will be useful to the people. She said, "I can help my people in a neutral and positive way. I raised 11 children and also have many grandchildren. I care about what happens here on the reservation and I would like to be a part of creating a better place."

She has traveled the world over and has a lot of ideas for making tribal governance better and more responsive to the needs of the oyate. She said, "I would like to ask for your support and vote. Wopila tanka. Mita kuyepi cante waste ya iyuha nape ciyuzapi."

As someone with a very good combination of education, experience and who understands the Lakota way, Black Bear promises to use her fluency in the Lakota language to relate to the Sicangu Lakota as she seeks elected office.

Graham asks high court to hear AIM slaying case

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ The Canadian man fighting extradition to South Dakota for the 1975 slaying of an American Indian Movement activist wants his country's Supreme Court to hear his case.

John Graham, a Yukon native, was taken into custody in June after a British Columbia judge denied his appeal of an order that he be sent to the United States to stand trial.

Graham had been under house arrest since he was charged in December 2003 with first-degree murder in the killing Anna Mae Pictou Aquash on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in late 1975. Her body was found Feb. 24, 1976. The Nova Scotia native had been shot in the head.

Aquash's murder came amid a series of clashes in the mid-1970s between federal agents and members of the American Indian Movement. Aquash, a member of Mi'kmaq Tribe of Canada, was among Indian militants who occupied Wounded Knee, S.D., for 71 days in 1973.

Prosecutors have said AIM leaders ordered Aquash's killing because they suspected she was a government informant. AIM leaders have denied that assertion.

The other man charged with killing Aquash, Fritz Arlo Looking Cloud, received a mandatory life sentence in 2004 after a federal jury in Rapid City convicted him of first-degree murder committed in the perpetration of a kidnapping. A federal appeals court upheld the conviction.

Witnesses at Looking Cloud's trial testified that Graham shot Aquash, whose family exhumed her body in 2004 from her grave in Oglala and reburied it in Nova Scotia.

Graham has said he's innocent, but the Canadian judge who issued the written ruling in June disagreed.

Graham filed an application seeking leave to appeal the court's order that he be extradited.

He has until Sept. 25 to submit written arguments and documents showing he should be allowed to appeal to the Supreme Court, said Deborah Strachan, a prosecuting attorney acting for the Attorney General of Canada on behalf of the United States.

The government then has 30 days to respond. A panel of three Canadian Supreme Court judges will then decide whether Graham will be allowed to appeal, which usually takes about three months.

If the panel denies Graham's request to appeal, he could be extradited as early next year. If Graham is allowed to appeal to Canada's Supreme Court, the case would likely continue for another year, Strachan said.

Emergency conservation program available

MARTIN - Shannon County has been approved for the Emergency Conservation Program. This program assists with emergency livestock water due to drought conditions. This program involves cost shares for implementing water practices such as wells, tanks, pipelines (both temporary and permanent) and water hauling.

While the county has been approved to take applications, currently no money is available to fund any practices. This means that the FSA County Office will take applications from Shannon County producers and then the County Committee will prioritize the requests for assistance when and if funding becomes a reality.

A 20 day sign up has been approved. As a result, the sign up period will run until Sept. 4. It is important to get in to the Bennett/Shannon FSA County Office in Martin as quick as possible to apply. This is especially true if you have completed a conservation practice due to the drought.

It is important to note this program is not an entitlement program where all applicants could earn benefits. Each application will be reviewed by the Committee and prioritized for possible funding. In other words, NO GUARANTEE of funding for applicants under ECP.

Also, the small payment rules are in effect - this means losses have to exceed $1000 to be eligible under the ECP program. If you have any questions and/or need information call 605-685-1239.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I have a lot of stuff on my mind and feel like nobody understands because when I think about it I think I'm just plain out insecure. I mean why am I feeling like this?

First of all I'm only in high school but I think I'm so in love but me and my boyfriend argue so much and when it comes down to breaking up we just can't do it. I mean I love him so much but my mom says that we are getting too serious and we shouldn't be acting like that.

My mom said that I'm going through the same stuff that she went through for 20 something years and yet I'm still in high school and I'm going through it.

I mean I notice it and I would like to take action and snap out of this high school romance. I don't want to break up with him because when he tells me that he loves me, he looks me right straight in the eye. And I can't do the same because it's hard for me to look people in the eye and say something that I mean, that's just not me. I guess all I want to know is this love for real or is it just another one of those high school things?

I don't like feeling like this because it makes me feel like I need some counseling, I mean I'm still in high school and yet I feel like I want to be with this guy for the rest of my life. I just need some real advice and not just another chew out by some adult who says "oh yea I been through that, you guys will get over it..."

I just don't want my heart broken again because that's not a nice thing to go through and how do I get rid of my insecurity? How can I make my boyfriend understand some things?

And please don't tell me the same stuff you told me last time. That just made me feel even worse, how can I get over the past? I have a strong feeling that I'll be going through this for awhile plus school's going to be starting and my boyfriend just has to be so damn girl crazy, last year he made me feel like one ugly duckling and made my self-esteem go down to it's lowest, so is he going to do that again?

But I'm going to go now because it's really late, so please tell me something good.

Dear wants to hear something good:

It's good that you know that the relationship is out of whack. It is good that you are honest with your obsession of this guy. It is good that you are young.

I am not going to tell you that you are not in love because that would be a presumption that I cannot make for you.

I can tell you that when you really look at this guy, and see him flirt, which is nothing less than showing no respect for you as a woman, then you have to reassess who it is you are in love with.

I can tell you something else. Practical words: young men have so much testosterone coursing through their veins that they will say anything to get laid. They will tell you they love you, and that they will spend the rest of their lives with you, that they want you to have their baby, that they want to take care of you, whatever they need to say little lady to get into your pants.

Love is in the action of loving. It is kind, generous, respectful and honorable. It is quiet and forceful and the most powerful emotion in the world. But it is not demanding, petulant (whiny), and demeaning.

When a man demeans me and our relationship by pursuing other women, when he talks down to me or embarrasses me in front of others, when he raises his voice to me in anger then I know he is not in love with me no matter what he says.

I know that he doesn't even like me, and I don't want to be with anybody no matter how I think I feel about him, that doesn't even like me and is not proud to be with me.

Don't set yourself up for heart break. Look how he treats you. That says a lot more than a man with just sex on his mind.

Good Luck! I hope I helped you find your way. Honesty with self beats all the rationalizations in the world!

Dear Anna,

How are you today? I hope you're doing good. Well for me I'm okay.

I just wanted to write you another letter and ask you some questions that I would like to know the answers to.

I hope you can help me out and fill me in on some answers.

First of all my Grandpa died years ago but before he died he buried some coins out on his land and spent many years looking for them, he could not remember the exact spot. My family and I went out to his land, two summers now, looking for them but had no luck in finding them. Do you see us finding them any time soon? If so, do you see the vicinity of these coins? And will these coins help my family in any way? We dug in several different spots but found nothing. Are we digging in the right area?

Second of all I like to travel and do new things. I want to learn more about other cultures and countries.

Do you see me going on any trips out of the country next summer? And if so do you see me finding money for this trip? Will it be a good experience for me?

Well that.s all for now so thank you for you time and I hope you could help me out.

Diggin' for Coins

Dear Diggin'

It really helps to have a metal detector. I hope you have one to use. I do see the area where the money was hidden a long time ago:

There is a large boulder or rock about 25 yards from where he dug the hole. The boulder is located about three and one half miles from the fence line close to where you have been digging. There were some bushes and shrubs in that area a long time ago, but now there is nothing but tall grass. There may be the remainder of a tree very close to where you should dig. Dig deep, because the wind has changed the depth of the soil.

If you want to see other countries, continue in school until you graduate, then look into the Peace Corps.

They specialize in small rural areas in third world countries in the heart of indigenous people.

Good Luck on the digging and the trip.

Dear Anna,

Since discovering your column over the internet, I've been enlightened by much of the advice you provide to the multitudes of readers. I am honored to be one of those who have found admiration in your insight.

Here is my inquiry: I have been married for 16 years and I have four children with my husband. Though I am Native (Lakota) my spouse (Latino) is not.

Though I have always believed that our differences have not bothered me, with a recent issue, I now have doubts.

Within the past year, or so, I have met a man through work that I have much in common with, the most substantial is that he is also Native (Lakota) as well.

We communicate a lot over the phone and by email. He has met and knows my husband as well as me.

Somewhere along our discussions, I had developed feelings for this man. And judging by some of the innuendos, this man may have feelings for me. The bad thing is that my husband found out about my feelings because he read my journal. When my husband asked, I told him the truth. Expectedly, this caused problems between my husband and the co-worker.

They don't get along,which is understandable.

Talking to my friends about this, they are good to advise me to continue with the marriage and forget about the coworker.

The thing is, my feelings for this co-worker are very strong and I can't stop thinking about him, or the things he has told me. I also can't help but to consider how much we have in common.

His influence over me is very strong, and though I've resisted temptation, I wonder if in the future I'll be able to continue to resist. So my question(s) is/are, how can I forget about this co-worker? If I am doubting my marriage to a non-Native, what can I do? I feel that if the opportunity presents itself, I would greatly consider leaving my husband for my co-worker.

Since I hold your advice with great depth and insight, I welcome and appreciate your words of wisdom.

Thanks for providing wonderful perspective for people like me.

Confused About Relationships

Dear Confused:

I don't know how wise I am, but I sure can recognize the ingredients for your confusion.

You have found out a truth about yourself. You would prefer the company of someone that truly understands the Spirit of Lakota compared to someone that doesn't.

Now, for the brass tacks. Brass tack one: If this man (the co-worker) was a woman and there was no sexual attraction would you leave your marriage for the friendship?

Brass tack two:

Are you unhappy in your marriage? Do you feel alone inside of it? Do you use the disparity in culture to belittle or demean what you think about your husband? In other words, do you blame him for not understanding?

Brass tack three:

Are you looking for an excuse to exit your marriage? Do you really need one?

Ouch. Those tacks hurt. This is what I see: You have an allegiance to your husband. You do not want to hurt him and you do care about him and his feelings.

You have a soul resonance with the co-worker. You can feel him. This makes life complicated.

There is no easy answer. It is not going to hurt you to be friends with the co-worker. Take it out of the dream state and put it right in front of yourself.

Open your eyes, heart and mind to the truth. There is no guarantee that this man would be with you for the rest of your life. There is no guarantee that he would understand your family and your children. There is no guarantee that it will work.

Now, where are you?

Is it this man or is it your marriage? Take a good long look.

Please don't make any decisions until a year has passed.

Then, if you still feel that another man is the answer to your problems, take action.

My heart goes out to you. It is not easy to be wed to a person that sees life differently, and does not, because of culture, have the same reference point for attitudes. It makes marriage a challenge.

However, it is not insurmountable.

A kind and open loving heart can bridge any differences: cultural, language, religious, social and economic. It just takes a decision to get through it and two open minds and hearts.

Dear Anna,

Hope all is going well for you.

I saw you about two weeks ago and I know you told me to hold off on my "wandering eye" but there is this guy whom I'm interested in. I was wondering if he felt the same?

I keep having these dreams of my partner with another woman, is this just because I feel the need to "stray." Please lead me toward the right direction.

Need Advice

Dear Needs Advice:

Try this on for size: Stay where you are until you make a decision not to be there. If you have an affair, you will be caught, your life will be hell, your family will be angry, you will be embarrassed, and everything appears from every one else's point of view to be your fault. It will jeopardize the custody of your children.

So, if you want out, then, get out. You will then be available to date anybody that you want to.

To involve someone else in your marriage, possibly get him assaulted, possibly get yourself assaulted by some woman that is with him, and create that kind of chaos is just silly and a little crazy. Try a calmer method.

Make a decision to be present in your current relationship or to leave it. Then, if you decide to stay in your current partnership, be honorable and treat him honorably.

One of the Basic Lakota Values.

If you leave, then do as you will. That is what single is.

Good luck and blessings to you.

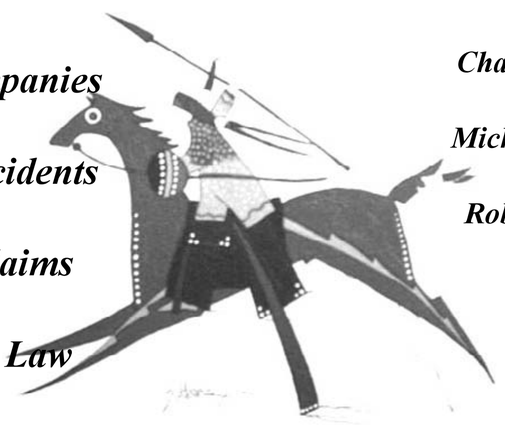
Do not stand at my grave and weep.
I am not there, I do not sleep.
I am a thousand winds that blow.
I am the diamond's glint on snow.
I am the sunlight on ripened grain.
I am the gentle autumn's rain.
When you awaken in the morning's hush,
I am the swift uplifting rush
Of quiet birds in circled flight.
I am the soft stars that shine at night.
Do not stand at my grave and cry:
I am not there,
I did not die.



Our hearts were broken the day God took you home-
Always missing you,

U.S. Dept. of Interior B.I.A. Fort Berthold Agency, PO Box 370 New Town, ND 58763 BID

The Bureau of Indian Affairs, Fort Berthold Agency is planning to conduct an Oil and Gas Sale within the next two (2) months. We will be offering all unleased allotted mineral acreage to the highest bidder through a competitive sealed bid process. We have established the primary terms of the lease as follows:

Minimum bonus per acre $75.00
Minimum annual rental rate per acre $2.50
Minimum royalty rate per acre 18%
Primary term of the lease 5 years

The approval of a mineral lease on the Fort Berthold Reservation is based on majority consent, under special authority enacted in 1998 and 1999, and codified under 25 U.S.C. 396. Upon completion of the competitive bid sale, leases will become effective, once the required number of owners have consented to lease and approved by the BIA Superintendent.

This decision is based upon the fact that Fort Berthold Agency has received numberous requests from prospective lessees to lease certain allotted minerals. Several lessees have been acquiring signatures for negotiated oil and gas leases on the Fort Berthold Reservation. While this attempt has been made in good faith, we feel it would be in the best interests of the allotted mineral owners to include their lands in an advertised lease sale in order to receive the optimum bonus consideration through competitive bid. We recommend the allotted mineral owners who are in negotiations for an oil and gas lease to give full consideration to this alternate option.

Those allotted mineral owners who do not wish to have their lands advertised in this competitive bid lease sale, please contact the Fort Berthold Agency in writing within (2) weeks of the date of this notice.

Our mailing address is as follows: Superintendent, PO Box 370, New Town, ND 58763. Our telephone number is (701) 627-4707.

Signed,
Earl Silk,
Superintendent

When you were born, Little pretty, pink dresses and pony-tails with dainty feet, instead we got blue jeans, tom boy antics and so much courage.
I love you very much and you fill me with pride.. You have grown into a fine woman and great mother and your beauty and character were the first good traits. You never cease to surprise us with your intelligence and your creative ways of craft and food. You are a good mother and I am so glad Tunkashila gave you to us.

8th Year of Severe Drought Conditions on Pine Ridge Reservation

Our department would like to remind the Oyate of the Pine Ridge Reservation that we are entering our 8th year of drought conditions. The weather has been kind lately, but we know it will heat up very quickly and every drop of water is precious.

Be Water-Wise Outdoors

- Try watering lawns in the early morning or late afternoon to prevent evaporation and scorching of the grass during mid-day sun.
- Try not to water on windy days
- Try using drip irrigation for your lawns. Saves 75% more water than s prinklers by limiting evaporation.
- Over-watering can cause fungus to form brown patches on lawns.
- Water lawns and shrubs once every five days to promote longer stronger roots.
- When mowing try keeping grass 3 inches long to help in moisture absorption.
- Keep swimming pools covered to stop debris and to help prevent evaporation.
- Try backwashing your swimming pool's filter weekly to help keep the water clean.
- Clean feet before entering pool.
- Make sure all livestock watering devices have an adequate float system that does not leak.
- Report all yard hydrant and thermo-line leaks to proper authorities.

Be Water-Wise Indoors

- Report all leaking bathroom and kitchen fixtures.
- When washing clothes use the right water setting for the load.
- Listen for toilet constantly running or filling when not in use (a leaky toilet can account for up to 1400 gallons of water lost per day, while the average household uses only 350 gallons per day.)
- A leaking toilet can cause your septic system to back up because of over saturation.
- Try using low flow toilets (1.5 to 2 gallons per flush), old toilets use up to 5 gallons per flush.
- Don't use your toilet as a garbage disposal.
- Turn off water while brushing teeth, shaving and washing dishes.
- Take fast showers instead of baths.
- Use low flow fixtures in baths and kitchens.
- An Ultra low flow showerhead uses 1.5 gallons per minute, while conventional showerheads can use up to 5 gallons per minute.

OST Public Safety to be governed by five board of trustees

OGLALA - By an overwhelming vote of 15 to 1, the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council voted to change the charter of the Oglala Sioux Tribe's Department of Public Safety.

The council voted to invest the authority into a five member board of trustees that hire and fire the chief of police and govern the business of the department of public safety.

"We felt that sometimes a nine member board has a tendency to get territorial and think of only the interest of their particular district and not the overall interest of the tribe or the charter itself," said Garfield Little Dog, council representative of Wounded Knee District and Chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

"We feel that a five member board of good, solid individuals will work hard to protect the Oglala Lakota Nation and the mission of Public Safety," he said.

Last week on Wednesday, administration and representatives of Public Safety met in Rapid City and the Judiciary Committee hosted a two and half day meeting on Thursday, Friday and Saturday to try and build some consensus on the what the new charter will look like.

RST council installs interim school board at St. Francis Indian School

ROSEBUD - In legislative action on Tuesday, the Rosebud Sioux tribal council voted 13-4 to remove the current school board at St. Francis Indian School and to install the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Education Review Board as the interim school board on Aug. 23.

A new SFIS school board election will be held on Aug. 23 and time will be allotted for the completion of background investigations of new board members.

St. Francis Indian School has sought to question the authority of the Rosebud Sioux tribe by challenging a recent ruling by the Supreme Court of the Rosebud Sioux tribe.

In order to clarify the decision RST tribal president wrote in a press release, "The St. Francis Indian School has been and will continue to be a tribally controlled school under federal law….The Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council has the authority to decide what entity administers the St. Francis Indian School Board."

"The current Board continues to refuse Tribal authority over the school even after they have lost in court," was stated in the press release.

"The education of our children will always be one of the highest priorities of my administration. I will continue to release information to the public to keep the people informed of the developments in the litigation brought by the Sicangu Oyate Ho corporation against the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council," stated Rodney Bordeaux, RST president.

The school had aired a public service announcement over KINI FM radio asking parents and other supporters to go down to the RST council meeting on Tuesday as the school presented a resolution to rescind the upcoming election.

The cost to transport parents to the meeting was questioned as an allowable cost and the resolution of this question remains unanswered. The meeting actually took place at the Rosebud Casino.

A five day challenge period will be allowed for challenges to the election process.

As noted, the new school board will complete their background investigations and once that occurs they will be officially sworn in.

In the meantime, the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Education Review Board will oversee the new school board election process on Aug. 23 to include counting the votes and continuing to make recommendations about the Charter and By laws of the Sicangu Oyate Ho, Incorporated.

The members of the RST tribal education Review Board include, Dr. Richard Bordeaux, Victor Douville, Sherry Red Owl, Eustace Night Shield, Ben Black Bear, Nancy Keller-Hernandez and Dr. Archie Beauvais.

Honoring the Elders is theme for 131st Rosebud Fair

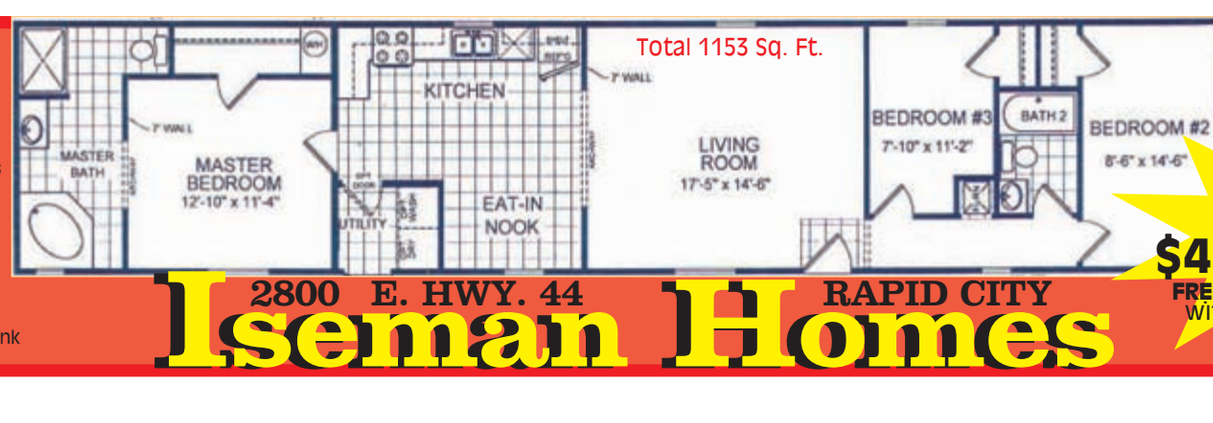
By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - The theme for the 131 annual Rosebud Fair is "Honoring the Elders" and it promises to be one of the best according to RST Wacipi chairman, Theodore "Ted" Felix. Total prize money for the three day fair which starts Friday, August 24 through Sunday, August 26 totals $70,000.00 with $23,000.00 drum split and $47,000.00 for the championship dance contest.

Powwow registration will begin at noon on August 24 and conclude on August 25 at noon, while day money will be paid to the tiny tots. There will be plenty of free camping available along with three meals a day being served at the 'cook shack.' Mary Sue Walking Eagle is in charge of the kitchen and an added feature this year will include a canopy with picnic tables available for diners to keep in the shade.

Emery Little Thunder participated in the last year's Rosebud Pow Wow contest.

Felix is a seasoned veteran when it comes to coordinating such a huge undertaking as the annual Rosebud Fair. He was a dancer in several categories as a young man and traveled the country side to many of the other major powwows and cities to dance. The annual event promises to attract a lot of contestants and visitors as many of the major celebrations on the northern plains have concluded and there will be little competition. Some say that powwows originated at Rosebud and if that is the case, then the tradition will be most certainly kept alive.



When describing the collaboration that has occurred in preparation for the fair, Felix said, "I have been working with some very knowledgeable RST staff people like Freda Heinert and Gerri Night Pipe. It has gone smoothly and the staff has been a lot of help. We have some younger people too on the committee and this will help to influence the younger people in a positive way."

Felix says that he expects in excess of 600 dance contestants and a host of American Legion posts and veteran's organizations. A number of specials will be held each day between 5:00 p.m. and 7:00 p.m. Marcella Prue of Antelope community will be honoring her daughter, Kathy, who was recently promoted to the rank of Lieutenant Colonel in the Air Force and who recently completed her Ph.D. Author, pilot and sun dancer, Ed McGaa will be honored also on Sunday evening. He is also an attorney and danced with Bill Schweigman. Terry Fast Horse will also be involved in a name giving ceremony.

During the Sunday evening honoring for Ed McGaa, Felix says that the

and representatives from Public Safety, tribal attorneys and everyone who might have a stake in the future of Public Safety to come to this meeting in Rapid City last week," said Little Dog.

Hopefully, it will be a catalyst that will help build consensus of the new board of trustees.

The new charter will go into effect as soon as council selects and sits the new board of trustees.

Originally the Judiciary Committee selected Harry Eagle Bull, Newton Cummings, Everett Janis, Wendell Yellow Bull and Nathan Backs to be the new board of trustees but in the end, the committee recommended to open up a 30 day application period from members of the communities to submit a letter of interest and resume' to Elizabeth Waters, secretary of the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

Perspective board members need to be members of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, residents of the Pine Ridge Reservation for a year, over the age of 30, free of any pending criminal charges in any court, free from any felony convictions in their lifetime, free from any misdemeanors or court convictions in the last five years, and a person who has no immediate family member (spouse, common in law partner, child or parent) working with the OST Department of Public Safety.

A member of the board may NOT serve on the tribal council or district executive boards, or the tribal executive board or community executive boards, or any state or county board or commission while they are serving as a member of the board of trustees.

They may serve on other tribal boards and entities that do not create a conflict of interest with their duties to the department of Public Safety.

The first board of trustees will be selected by tribal council from a qualified list prepared by Elizabeth Waters following the Sept. 30 application deadline.

The first board selected by the tribal council will serve for five years, at that time, the board of trustees shall appoint five members, one member each to serve a five year term, four year term, three and two year and one year term in order to create five staggered terms.

Earlier this year, the tribal council considered replacing the current Chief of Police James Twiss and instead decided to review carefully an evaluation of the chief of police in September of 2007.

According to Little Dog, the new charter replaces all previous resolutions and ordinance concerning the OST Department of Public Safety.

It will be up to the new board of trustees to evaluate the chief of police and to make a decision whether to keep him or advertise for a new chief.

Council votes down one code of ethics, tables another

In a long awaited vote, the tribal council voted 7 for and 9 against for a new code of ethics prepared by tribal attorney George Patton. The sticking point for the new code of ethics centered on the requirement that a council tribal member or executive board member must not be allowed to sit on other tribal, state or federal organizations that will conflict with duties of tribal council or executive board member.

Tom Conroy, tribal council from Wakpmani and chairman of the Land Committee presented a code of ethics prepared by the committee, which did not include the prohibition of the members serving on other boards; the land committee resolutions was tabled 15 for and one against.

On a resolution put on the agenda by a two thirds vote, the council voted 16-0 to keep the Pine Ridge Reservation and 1851 and 1868 treaty areas nuclear free, prohibiting any uranium development or mining.

The tribal council postponed two special sessions scheduled for August. A special session on the Human Resource department and personnel policies and procedures was rescheduled for Tuesday, Sept. 11. The planned special session on Oglala Sioux Tribe's Lakota Housing Authority board and charter has been rescheduled to Wednesday, Sept. 12.

wacipi committee is promoting a contest in which dancers will use a single bustle and dance the old style fancy dance which was so prevalent when McGaa first started dancing. The prize money will be $500.00 winner take all.

"The Rosebud Law Enforcement Services will have a visible presence during the three days and, in fact, will be conducting road checks and enforcing the no alcohol ordinance. Units from Cheyenne River, Yankton, the Oglala Sioux and the FBI will also assist in patrolling the area" said Felix.

At present, barriers are being constructed for the police and ambulance services, while some fencing will be erected in the camping area for crowd control and safety of campers. The Catholic Church will put up a canopy also and offer free water and bingo, while the Tree of Life and other denominations have done some repair work at the powwow arena. The Tree of Life has also provided extra picnic tables for people to rest and eat their food. For more information call Ted Felix at 605-747-2571 or 828-0220.

Adams to participate in Miss Teen South Dakota

Marcella Adams

ST. FRANCIS - Marcella Adams, 15, a freshman at St. Francis Indian School has been invited to participate in the Miss Teen South Dakota pageant to be held at the Ramkota Inn on Nov. 10, 11, 2007. The daughter of Yolanda Adams and Kenneth Wright, she says that she is a good student and spends a lot of with family.

Marcella appears to be prepared to do the necessary fundraising along with her mother who will also serve as her chaperone. The age bracket for the pageant is ages 15-19 and most of the funding to sponsor her entry into the pageant will be by donations from local businesses and individuals. The donations from businesses can be deductible as an advertising expense.

Thus far, Marcella has received a donation from the Tax Express in Mission and will be canvassing other individuals and businesses that can assist her in raising the required $695.00.

Miss Teen South Dakota participants will be judged upon a personal interview, a swimwear contest and evening gown competition with each category representing 33 percent of the total score.

For Marcella, entering the Miss Teen South Dakota pageant is a "first" for her as it will take a lot of initiative to complete and submit all of the required information. In addition to a photograph, she will be required to submit a copy of her birth certificate, school transcripts, the $695.00 fee and five colored forms with a variety of information required.

Marcella and her mother are requesting sponsorship support from area Rosebud businesses and individuals. Please call Yolanda at 605-208-2388 if you are able to provide sponsorship support.

Red Cloud hosts volleyball jamboree, officials receive training

PINE RIDGE - Todd County, Hill City, Pine Ridge and Red Cloud participated in the volleyball jamboree Friday hosted by Red Cloud. The round robin event allows teams to get in a scrimmage and is designed as a refresher session for older experienced officials and to introduce new officials to the rules of the game and allow them to gain some much needed experience with officials who have a number of years under their belts.

"At the rate we are going, we will run out of officials in the coming years, we need to take the time to develop younger men and women who love the game and want to stay involved through officiating," said Jennifer Schaer, Red Cloud athletic director, "our officiating crews are aging and nearing retirement and we are going to reach a crisis where we won't have enough trained and experienced officials for our matches."

Brett Distel, Iggy Magbuhat and Joe Drab provided instruction and encouragement to the five individuals who came to learn about volleyball officiating including Melissa, Julie and Pete Blacksmith, Pat Clifford and Wilbur Buckman. Officials and student officials watched two DVD's on mechanics, participated in officiating matches which included a 25 point game and a 15 point game on a 25 minute limit followed up by viewing a video tape and an evaluation. Each high school team had three matches during the day.

"The jamboree was outstanding," said Joe Drab, an official with 30 plus years experience who does football, volleyball, basketball, middle school wrestling and fast pitch softball and baseball in the summer, "the people who showed up did a marvelous job, they put 100 per cent into what they were doing."

According to Drab, there are young people who get interested in officiating but they change jobs, move away, can't get time off from their full time job and all of this creates a shortage in officials around the state, mostly in football and volleyball.

"It is a fun job, I like being with the kids, they are a lot of fun and I've made a lot of friends over the years with players, their parents and now I even officiate games with their children," said Drab, "football is my favorite sport, you are outside with quite a bit of room, not in a closed space and surprisingly volleyball is my toughest sport when you are up there you have to stay focused the entire game, you don't have a lot of back-up and especially in tournaments it takes a lot of energy to stay focused for long periods of time, its fun though."

Protesting tribal government

ROSEBUD - Exercising the right of dissent was clearly in evidence as morning commuters through the agency town of Rosebud were surprised by a group of 4 tribal members protesting tribal government. A couple of signs clearly indicated their dissatisfaction as the protesters said they would be protesting for one day. The silent protest was staged at the beginning of Rosebud Fair week and Rosebud Sioux tribal elections on Thursday.

Webber dominates Tough Woman contest in Ft. Thompson

FT. THOMPSON - Christy Webber, a 2005 Pine Ridge High School graduate, beat Kari Two Lance, a 2006 Todd County graduate in a TKO decision to win the women's lightweight division Sunday at the Lodestar Casino Rumble on the Rez Tough Woman contest.

Webber took out Larrissa Blaine on a referee's decision at 1:56 of the first round in her first match. Samantha LaRoche was the opponent in the semis and Christy won the match after three rounds in a unanimous decision. In the championship match, Webber came out landing strong body punches while Two lance went unsuccessfully for Webber's head. The continuing string of body punches took its toll on Two Lance.

Webber ran cross country and played basketball at Dakota Wesleyan University in Mitchell her freshman year in college and plans to play basketball at Chadron State College this fall. Two Lance played basketball at Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence, Kan. this past year.

Todd County's Prue earns medallist honors, Red Cloud takes West River Conference team title

GORDON, Neb. - Alex Prue, a sophomore at Todd County, was the lone golfer from the Mission based school but he made his own impact on the Red Cloud Invitational and West River Conference meet by shooting an 85 and winning individual honors for both events.

Hot Springs won the Red Cloud Invitational team trophy with a 356, Custer was second with 364 while Red Cloud was third with 367. Red Cloud fielded the only full team to win the West River Conference championship.

Todd County, Pine Ridge, St. Francis, Little Wound and Bennett County fielded partial teams.

Top individual finishers in the Red Cloud Invitational included Prue at 85, Casey Whitney/Custer and Andrew Terrel/Hot Springs tied for second with an 86 while Kyle Lewis/Hot Springs and Montana Sierra/Red Cloud tied for fourth. In the West River Conference competition, Prue won it with the 85, Sierra was second with 87, Little Wound's Josh Mousseau was third with 88, Mike Twiss/Red Cloud and Michael Lays Bad/Little Wound were tied for fourth.

Red Cloud's team also included: Geoffrey Black Feather 91, Dustin Brewer 100 and Lyle Jack with 105. Dominic Arthur scored 89 for nine holes in the JV competition.

Pine Ridge was represented by Joe Keith 90, Eric Long 92 and Bruce Jacobs 136 while Austin Prue of St. Francis has 110 and their JV players Eric One Star 74 and Andre Crow Eagle 63.

Bennett County was represented by Bo Johnson 102 and Nate Kaltenback 114; Custer - Johnny Couch 89, Chad Bryont 94, Joe Michalewicz 95, Cameron Riley 96 and Cody McLaughlin 98; Hot Springs - Brandy Besco 90, PJ Wetzel 93, Cole McNulty 94 and JV Jake Palo 51, Brandon Gerick 53, Alex Bucholz 66 and Logan Malde 77.

Red Cloud travels to the Custer Triangular on Thursday and to Todd County a week from Thursday.

Legislative panel approves mountain lion limits, Pine Ridge, Rosebud made no formal requests for exclusion

PIERRE (AP) - A legislative committee has approved the state Game, Fish and Parks Commission's plan to let South Dakota hunters shoot more mountain lions this year.

The Legislature's Rules Review Committee narrowly rejected a proposal that would have blocked the new limits from taking effect. The panel then approved the new limits, which wildlife officials said are aimed at maintaining a healthy population of mountain lions in the Black Hills.

The new limits let hunters kill up to 35 cougars, but no more than 15 females could be shot. That means the season will end when either 35 mountain lions or 15 females are killed.

Last year's season ended when the eighth female was killed. A total of 16 mountain lions were taken.

The increased limit is based on research and is intended to keep the Black Hills mountain lion population at its current level, said George Vandel, GF&P assistant wildlife director.

The Black Hills mountain lion population is still growing, Vandel said. ``We feel they can easily handle this kind of harvest,'' he said.

Based on research by South Dakota State University graduate students, Vandel said wildlife officials believe the Black Hills has 200-225 mountain lions. More than 60 young lions are added to the population each year, and last year 46 adults were confirmed killed from all causes, which include car accidents, the hunting season and the removal of problem lions.

Some undocumented deaths occur, and some cougars leave the Black Hills in search of new territory, biologists have said.

Nancy Hilding of Black Hawk, president of the Prairie Hills Audubon Society, urged lawmakers to suspend the rules allowing the higher limits because she believes Game, Fish and Parks officials have not done enough research on mountain lions outside the Black Hills.

In previous years, the season had separate licenses for the prairie that allowed farmers and ranchers to get licenses to shoot cougars on their own land. The season this year will let hunters with licenses hunt either in the Black Hills or prairie.

Hilding said the Oglala Sioux Tribe wanted the area around the Pine Ridge Reservation to be off limits, but the Game, Fish and Parks Commission allowed hunting there. Other areas, such as northwestern South Dakota, might develop lion populations unless hunters kill too many females, she said.

Instead of making licenses good throughout the state, officials should divide South Dakota into more units so the population could be managed in each area, Hilding said.

The higher limit could result in more young lions being orphaned before their mothers have taught them how to avoid conflicts with people, Hilding said. Some then could run into problems with people, she said.

``A sport hunt doesn't necessarily relieve the conflict with humans,'' she said.

State and tribal biologists consulted on the issue, but the Oglala and Rosebud tribes made no formal requests to exclude the areas from the mountain lion hunt, Vandel said.

All mountain lions shot by sport hunters so far have been in the Black Hills, and wildlife officials know of no established population outside that region, he said.

Rep. Bill Thompson, D-Sioux Falls, sought to suspend the higher limit, which would have meant that last year's season and limits would have been used again this year. Thompson said he thinks wildlife officials should have to explain their research in greater detail.

But Thompson's suggestion failed 2-3, and the panel then approved the rule setting the higher limit.

American Indians owed $60 million

WASHINGTON - Some $60 million is owed to American Indians who have not claimed inheritances or interest from tribal land allotments, the federal government said.

The federal Office of the Special Trustee for American Indians is looking for more than 45,000 beneficiaries nationwide. A trust officer for the agency, John Roach, said that includes 4,000 Navajos.

The beneficiaries are eligible for disbursements ranging from a couple of pennies to more than $100,000, but the government doesn't know where the beneficiaries are.

``It's unconscionable for us to have $50,000, $60,000 or $100,000 and not do everything in our power to find them,'' Roach said. ``We have a very important but strict financial duty to them.''

Roach said more than half the beneficiaries are owed $100 or more.

Julie Redhouse, an accounting technician for the OST, said American Indians are missing out on payments for a number of reasons.

People who are in line to inherit money or estates from deceased family members either don't know of the inheritance or have moved and failed to update their mailing address, she said.

All earnings and inheritances are reviewed and paid out by the OST, which also sends quarterly statements to land owners, listing all money, assets and real estate.

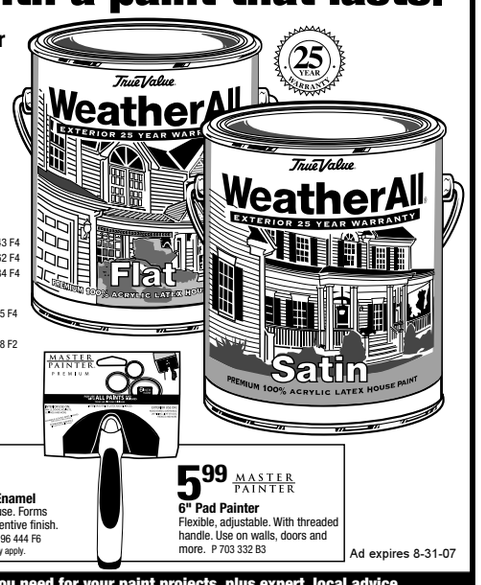
The office also owes money to descendants of the original trustees of tribal land attained through the General Allotment Act of 1887, Redhouse said.

In the absence of a will, the act provided that upon death of the allottee, the ownership title would be divided among the heirs.

``When heirs don't keep their records or mailing addresses updated, they miss out on quarterly payouts,'' Roach said.

Heirs who share ownership with dozens or even hundreds of other beneficiaries might receive only a few cents every quarter, but those who have inherited a fraction of land leased for grazing or for the development of natural resources might be eligible for larger dividends.

The agency also holds on to accrued interest or inheritance until a beneficiary turns 18.



``Sometimes we lose track of them if they inherited land when they were juveniles,'' Roach said. ``The sad thing is, when the land produces money, we can't find them.''

The OST is asking that all American Indians check with the agency to find out whether they are owed money or have assets.

On the Office of the Special Trustee for American Indians Internet website, www.ost.doi.gov, one can search to see if their names is listed for money.

Elders Words of Wisdom ...

"But each of us must find out for himself or herself what their gift is, so that they can use it in their life."

Jimmy Jackson, OJIBWAY

The old people say, everyone has a song to sing. This song is the reason we are on this earth. When we are doing what we came on this earth to do, we know true happiness. How will we know our song? Pray. Ask the Great Mystery, "What is it you want me to do during my stay on earth?" Ask. He will tell you. He will even help you develop yourself to accomplish His mission.

Great Spirit, help me find my song and let me sing it.

Finding My Voice

The next generation will see past skin color

Dana Badmilk

Nobody wants to ever talk about racism, because it is so ugly. It is easier swept under rug. In fact, I would rather sweep it out the door, but after seeing all the hoopla about Don imus, I feel I need to talk about it now.

I grew up on a reservation. When I was a kid things were more "in your face." What I mean is, when I went into a drugstore, or gift shop in a border town I was followed, watched....the sales clerk even being a few steps behind me. I remember making sure my hands didn't touch any part of my body and I had the $20 bill my dad gave me to spend out in the open in one hand, just so the clerk knew I had money to buy the bubbles and coloring books I wanted.

I remember my grandma arguing with some of the workers...declaring, "We have money! We don't steal! Even though our land was stolen, we are not thieves."

When I was a kid I thought all white people were bad. I thought they all looked down on us. It got to be so bad that I felt inferior when we moved to a nearby city. I was made fun of by only one kid in first grade for being Indian, but at the time it felt like the whole class looked down on me and hated me. I withdrew into myself. I could have made friends. I could have been "normal." But I was so scared because of one little idiot's opinion of me, and to be real, you know he learned it from his parents. All the racist things he said. What first grader just thinks up that stuff.

I cried to move back home and I was sent back to my grandma's for the rest of first grade. I was still shy but a happy shy well, until I peed my pants on the bus.

Anyway, moving on.

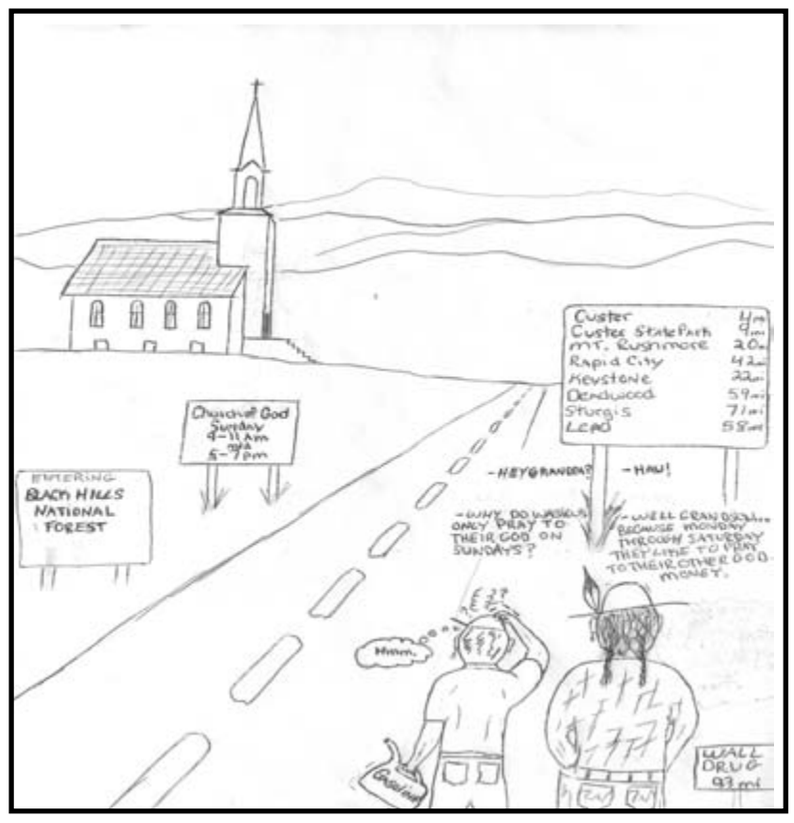
When I moved away from home and to the city at age 18 I applied for every job I could get. Does anyone remember how hard it is to get your first job? I mean you are so scared and you dress nice for the interviews. You have no idea how to give good interview, no idea how to lie a little to make yourself look like the best option. I must have went to a dozen interviews and didn't get one job. I, of course chalked it up as racism. I know now it wasn't, I was just a naive, inexperienced, 18 year old who was starting to get an attitude. It was easier to claim racism than blame my lack of experience.

Anyway I had a friend who worked at Burger King on the closing shift, which is basically cleaning all the grease off of everything. She got me a job there working two nights every two weeks. I know that is so pathetic, but I took it. It was nasty. I hate Burger King.

In the mean time, since I was only getting 16 hours every two weeks I also got a part time job at an arts and crafts gallery called Sioux Trading Post. On my third night of work at Burger King I was screamed at for not going fast enough on something I had no idea what it was. I was never the cook. It was my first night without my friend and the other manager. I walked out and chalked it up to racism. It was easy to call things racism, even though that manager was eight months pregnant and crabby anyway.

I worked at Sioux Trading Post full time after that and I was able to sell my beadwork. I was able to "shine" in my pride of my heritage. I learned more about my people and who I was working there, then I did in my whole 18 years on the reservation.

I learned a thing or two about a thing or two since then. I learned to recognize it when I see it and not just assume everything and everyone is racist. Over the years and all the moves I made many different friends from many different cultures. I lived on a border town for a while in the last two years and I saw racism and I didn't. Some of the people there know that they can't survive as a town without our tribe. Some of them still don't like us...but that's their loss. Some of them grew up among us and everyone knows everyone. A lot of them work for our tribe, so they need us, they work for our hospital, for our schools, for our department of Social Services.



I don't see it like I used to.

There are racist people who are up front about it. They are hated for their attitudes and for being up front. Then there are racist people who keep it inside, but you know they are. They can say derogatory remarks and it's okay, because they claim they are not racist. Or they are not a minority so they are insensitive to what hurts and what doesn't. They even lie to themselves about who they are. Some of them work for places where they have no right to be secretly racist such as in the Social Service Department in Pine Ridge. They are so rude it's easier to not sign up for help than to be treated that way. Either way, racism is hurtful.

My kids went to many diverse schools. They don't see people as black, or Indian or white or Filipino, because they are all 4 cultures anyway. They never picked their friends based on color.

Like my mom said, adults in towns spend money on studying what can make their community more diverse. They bring in study groups to try and make the small town community a better place to live with the different cultures involved. But somehow, it is easier for the next generation to get past color and see people for what they are...human. The children have figured it out on their own. Let's hope this only gets easier as we go along.

Dana Badmilk is a 35 year old self employed artist who recently moved back to the Pine Ridge Reservation. She lives there with her husband and four children. She can be read at her blog here http://danasvoice.blogspot.com.

Looking for friends of Carl West

Dear Editor:

My father, Carl West, was adopted by Delmer Arrow and his family many years ago. He has been traveling from his home in South Florida to South Dakota for almost two decades to attend ceremonies, bring blankets and sporting goods to the children and visit with his family there. Early July 2007 my father passed away.

My children and I would very much like to hear from anyone there who may have known him. We know and love our adopted family there in South Dakota and very much would like to stay in touch and continue to honor Delmer's memory and my father's as the time he spent there was very precious to him and to us.

He has shared endless stories and photos and tales of history and life there which has had a profound impact on our lives. The on-line July 7 obituary for Carl West can be found at: http://www.edgleycremationservices.com/obituaries.php. Your memories and contact information are greatly appreciated.

The best critics of the HBO film was the audience

Dear Editor:

After reading Tim Giago's article about the HBO film, "Bury My Heart At Wounded Knee," I want you to know how "dead on" your opinion was.

My husband and I felt privileged to have been invited to see the premiere. My thoughts during the movie were that the romance was out of place along with the fictional characters which detracted from the focus of Wounded Knee.

I also understand that film makers give the public what they want at any given time in the history of movie making.

It's about money. It is a conflict to me that current movies are so full of fictional violence using special effects when we only have to look at our history both past and current to see real violence. In the HBO film, this real horrendous violence was not portrayed as it really was, yet it was better than films of old which were so terribly slanted and just untrue. As kids who went to the movies in the 1940's and after, we didn't know the truth and no one told us because they didn't know! It is this ignorance that must be overcome.

Sir, I love western history of our country and in reading and learning all I can, I have raised my child to not be ignorant about what was done to the American Indian. Also, I truly love the pow wow at Pine Ridge because it is more soulful than when held at the Rushmore Civic Center.

I feel so proud of the young men in the drum circles, the young people in the grand entry who so beautifully and proudly display their rich cultural heritage.

Yet, people ask me, "Aren't you afraid to go there?" I urge friends and neighbors to go and see for themselves this stirring event. It is a jewel to cherish in our current history.

At the HBO performance that night, Mayor Shaw mentioned some kind of alliance between Rapid City and Pine Ridge to get more people from Rapid City to attend some of the events.

Yet, since then I haven't seen a word in the papers or media about the pow wow, about anything happening, no articles about this living, breathing entity in our own backyard. To me, it was more political whitewash. Yet, problems on the reservation are in the media which still give a hidden version of the whole truth.

If I want to know what is happening, I go to the on line Pine Ridge Chamber of Commerce website or ask my friend who lives at the reservation and who invited me in the first place to the powwow at Pine Ridge.

Additionally, my husband and I can't do a lot of heavy yardwork anymore so utilize day labor in Rapid City a lot. Many of the men and some women are American Indian. Again, I'm asked, "Aren't you afraid they'll steal or leave beer bottles around?"

Absolutely not. In every case, we appreciate the help, the good work, always fix a nice lunch and pay well over what others pay in taking advantage of "cheap" labor.

My mother taught me that when people work hard for you, you feed them, and you treat people with respect and appreciation. Every worker has told me, "We don't get treated like this. People take advantage of us as cheap labor."

Please understand, Sir, that I am not a "do gooder". I hate do gooders because it has been my experience that all too often they have their own interests in the forefront without feeling from the heart

What we do today will determine successes, failures of the next generation

To the Oglala Oyate:

A legal truth to be addressed by Oglala Oyate is the true status of Oglala Sioux Tribe sovereignty. Right now, the Oglala Sioux Tribe's jurisdiction and authority, legally, does not exist. To correct this problem a New Election must proceed, as ordered on Oct. 22, 2006, by the Election Court of Appeals - and affirmed by the true 2004-2006 tribal council.

The Oct. 22, 2006 court order of the Election Court of Appeals has nullified their candidacies and has ruled for a new election. Tribal Council of the 2004-2006 administration upheld this order and organized a completely new election. However, this never happened because a "coupe de etates", a criminal taking of the OST government - took place.

The situation presents a clear-and-present danger to the existence of the OST.

Because of this illegal government, legal theory dictates that the tribe has no governmental authority or jurisdiction, and therefore the OST's sovereignty does not exist right now. Until the Court Ordered New Election takes place, the OST is without a lawful governing tribal council.

These individuals who now illegally "claim" to be council members only form a rouge group of individual-private people who are not of the law, who are without authority, and who's decisions, orders, and statements are null and void (legally unenforceable by tribal and federal law), because such orders were made by violators of tribal law. Only a new election can re-establish the OST government; and without a new election, the OST simply does not legally exist. The tribe faces many challenges, including new international policy such as the Security and Prosperity Partnership Agreement, and the possible formation of a North American Union - and how this will affect the Oglala Sioux Tribe; we have to consider the proposed possibility of a new currency in North America - the Amero. The OST must develop new policies which will secure a viable economy, education, create jobs, improve healthcare, and preserve the traditional culture for the next generation. The old thinking that "tribal corruption is good for the few, things will always be the way they are"… is wrong. A new age has already risen,

Rosebud Fair is a benchmark for many

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The Rosebud Fair is now in its 131st year and many people use it as a 'benchmark' of sorts to govern the movement of their lives. Well, maybe not the movement, necessarily, but certainly what they do shortly before or after the Rosebud Fair.

My mother told me yesterday, that people used to look forward to the White River Frontier Days with the same anticipation as the Rosebud Fair. My auntie, Margaret, was married to Jesse Leneaugh and apparently he was quite the bronc rider as he would often bring home his winnings. He also had his picture on their annual poster for the longest time.

I have been attending the Rosebud Fair since 1976 continuously and it was a time when I had interrupted my attendance at the fair to serve in the military and attend college. It was an emotional experience to see it in 1976 as it had been nine years since I was there and it was so good to be home.

When I started college again in 1977 I would always come home and would not return to Boston until the day after the Rosebud Fair. I can remember many a fair, watching the finals late on the last night or standing in a light rain while they finished the finals.

I am certain that there are hundreds of youngsters and visitors who do similarly as the fair is a demarcation line of sorts. I don't know if I can adequately explain the meaning of the fair, but it's like something that we hang on to culturally and socially as it is something that bonds us.

We probably all have particular memories of fair time, the food and the fun.

Who could forget powwow food also, as I was just as guilty as the next in consuming an Indian taco. I recall visiting with Calvin Jumping Bull a time or two or listening to Chief Fools Crow. It was thrill to listen to the Porcupine Singers, Ironwood Singers, Red Leaf or even Sons of the Oglalas. I remember brothers Robert or Myron enjoying themselves and hoping that they did not get into a tussle with anyone and that they got home safely. Many probably remember the time we had to purchase a button to get into the powwow, but that idea has been abandoned. Surely, it must have helped to defray some of the overhead costs.

It used to be that school started after the fair, but now they start during Rosebud Fair week and the kids have Friday off. I imagine that some parents do not send their students to school until after the fair.

The whole fair scene is an important benchmark in Sicangu life as it is kind of like Labor Day in that we are able to close out the summer and get ready for school and the coming autumn months.

I often wonder what kind of activities our ancestors engaged in as they arrived in Rosebud for the fair on horseback along with their teepees and made it a family experience.

Our ancestors knew how to relax and the fair was their way of demonstrating a balance in their life.

Actually, fair time is supposed to be a subdued time this year for our family as we recently lost a brother and thoughts of him will abound. Carl loved the rodeo and often practiced bareback when he was a young man.

Dr. Archie Beauvais, (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and currently works as the director of the Lakota language preservation project for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. Notes From Indian Country

When is a citizen not a citizen?

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

There are 213 enrolled Numunuu (Comanche) residing in the State of New Mexico, according to California attorney Dennis G. Chappabitty, himself a Comanche. He was in Albuquerque last week as the Project Facilitator to discuss the work in progress on the new Comanche Nation Constitution.

The work on the new Constitution has been ongoing for more than two years and the people of the Comanche Nation, whether residing in New Mexico, California, Oklahoma or any other state in the union have a say in how the Constitution will be worded.

The "Public Hearing Process" was held on the beautiful campus of the Southwest Indian Polytechnic Institute in Albuquerque. The fact that only 20 of the 213 citizens of the New Mexico Comanche community showed up for this most important meeting caused some in attendance to talk about the apathy that has plagued the Comanche Nation voters over the past several years.

The new definition of "Citizen of the Comanche Nation" to replace "Tribal Member of the Comanche Nation" caused some attendees to admit that they found the new wording difficult because they had spent most of their lives referring to themselves as "tribal members." Said one in attendance, "But I guess I can get used to calling myself a citizen of the Comanche Nation because I think it has a better ring to it than tribal member plus it points out that we are citizens of our own Nation."

Mr. Chappabitty described the old 19-page Constitution as being pretty frayed and dog-eared from it use and misuse over the many years of its existence. The new 34-page Constitution hopes to include many new addition and interpretations along with correcting those portions of the old Constitution that badly needed upgrading, updating and total revision.

This appears to be a process that is taking place in many parts of Indian country. The Rosebud Sioux Tribe in South Dakota is another Indian nation restructuring its Constitution. The Cherokee Nation of Oklahoma just had provision approved that the Secretary of the Interior will no longer have a say in what goes into their Constitution, which was a major step forward from the days when the Bureau of Indian Affairs had nearly total control over the Cherokee government.

It is a lesson to me that Indian nations such as the Comanche consider all of their people as citizens of their Nation. No matter where they reside they are still permitted to engage in the political processes of the Nation. Among many tribes, including most of them in South Dakota, once a person moves from the reservation they abdicate their right to vote or to run for office. They are not allowed to become involved in planning the budget that includes health, education and the welfare of tribal members. And yet, when it comes to determining the monetary allocations requested by the tribe from the federal government, all tribal members are counted whether they live on or off of the reservation. The higher the body count, the higher the funding.

In other words, once you leave a reservation, say the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, you become a non-citizen. Even those Lakota residing in Rapid City, the birthplace of the famous warrior Crazy Horse, are still considered as "off the reservation." And if you move back to the reservation in order to run for office, you must prove residency of one year before your name can be placed on the ballot.

Before Tom Short Bull, now president of the Oglala Lakota College, challenged the law that said if you were born off the Pine Ridge Reservation you would not be considered an enrolled member of the tribe, many Lakota were listed as "non-enrolled" and were thus ineligible for many tribal benefits. When Short Bull decided to run for the presidency of the tribe, he challenged his "non-enrolled" status in tribal court and won.

As I listened to the citizens of the Comanche Nation, now residing in New Mexico, discuss revisions to their Constitution, I became more convinced than ever the many other Indian nations that prevent their people living off of the reservation from participating as full citizens, to follow the example of the Comanche Nation and to give back the rights to all of its citizens that were taken from them by the non-Indian bureaucracy.

After all, a United States citizen living in Belgium does not lose his right to vote, but merely votes on an absentee ballot, the same way the citizens of the Comanche Nation residing outside of Oklahoma vote. I believe it is high time all Indian nations change their constitutions to include all of their citizens.

what is needed and just plain decent. It is this kind of ignorance that must be eliminated be we American Indian, white, green, or whatever color. It is my opinion that only with each generation's truth handed down will the truth be known. The truth is a little more closer these days than it was when I was growing up, so steps, though gradual, seem to be taking place.

I didn't intend to say all this so I have gone beyond a simple thank you for the article. I must say, in conclusion, that that the best critics of the HBO film was the audience itself. Ordinarily I would have expected applause at the end. Instead, the audience was absolutely silent. It was very moving and soul stirring. The injustice and pain was still felt I thought. Yet, the quiet dignity of that silence spoke more than any critic could ever write. There is still a lot of work to do and a lot of ignorance to overcome.

and the next generation of Oglalas will have to compete with a global economy in a new world community. What we do today will very well determine the successes or failures for this and the next generation, and possibly determine the very existence of the OST. A new election now will be a step in the right direction toward meeting these challenges.

No one is going to give change to us, we are going to have to make it for ourselves

Dear Editor:

This letter is in response to the article, "How do we better ourselves and get rid of those statistics?" by Dana Lone Hill.

One word comes to mind when I think about this question and that one word is revolution, a revolution of the people's mind, body, spirit and emotion. The definition of the word aside from meaning an overthrow of a government by those governed and usually by forceful means with another form of government taking its place also means a complete or radical change of any kind; radical meaning favoring fundamental or extreme, thorough change; fundamental meaning the foundation or basis of a thought or idea which is an essential part of something; and extreme meaning to the greatest degree far from what is usual and conventional. These words and what the meaning of these words could stand for may possibly hold the most important principles, theories and laws for change.

Who we once were as a great nation of strong people with our land and the wealth of our natural resources is why we are all segregated now on tiny reservations. It is why the reality of our people is as it is today in comparison to who we once were. Just as America once fought us for the control of our land and our natural resources and the majority of the United States who then called for the extermination of us is the same reason why they have been killing in the Middle East this whole time. It is the same old reason, it is all for wealth, control and power.

We as Lakota and as Indigenous people for that matter have been tricked, deceived and pushed for decades through the generations of our relations into a slow motion poisonous sleep of death whether we know it or not. This will inevitably lead to the mass murder of us as a people that many have said is an already on-going silent genocide that has been occurring for centuries but a genocide nonetheless.

When the integrity and spirit of our people was strong and the circle whole and complete we were independent; we were true sovereign nations. That is why the now so-called 'United States of America' made its early treaties with the Indigenous people of their 'new found world' long ago. Because if you look back at the history of the beginning birth of the United State of America, you will find that its early people just 'European immigrants' fled here to the new world to escape persecution from their already cruelly oppressed homelands. And one of the ways in declaring themselves a sovereign and independent nation to their former 'government' was to make treaties with other sovereign and independent nations. Which were the Indigenous peoples of their 'new found world' a world that had no fences and no visible boundaries of ownership and that in the eyes of a them meant free for the taking.

And if you look even further as to how independent we were as a people you will find that our ancestors have occupied these lands for at least 40 to 50,000 years prior to the Europeans 'discovery.' And through the old stories of the old ones, through various works of Indigenous writers and through the personal accounts of some wasicus in those times you will learn that we had awesome power through all aspects of ourselves, physically, mentally, spiritually and mystically.

So in going back to the multiple questions that are on many peoples minds, 'How do we better ourselves and get rid of all those statistics?' 'How do we demand a better life for the people and get it?' 'How do we bring about change?' Well this is just my opinion here and I am sure I am not sounding like a politician but rather more like a revolutionary.

A few key things to keep in mind would be that 'without deviation from the norm change will not be possible' and no one is going to give this change to us. We are going to have to make it and take it for ourselves. And it is an eternal truth that writing about something and doing it are definitely two entirely different things. I'll always remember what Sitting Bull said during his time, "our greatest leaders have yet to come." So who is ready to speak and stand up for the people? Who is ready to die for the people if need be? I already see many of you who are willing to give your life for a country that has never loved you or your Oyate, brain washed by doctrines that have captivated millions before you and I am sure millions after you too. But do you have the heart to give your life for your people, your Oyate?

Very few know of the whole undeniable truth in the history of the 'discovering' of this 'new world' and the founding, making and shaping of this nation for it is a dark one. One that is full of lies and deceit and based on murder and thievery. And too many have always believed in these lies that have been fed to them for generations by those who knew the truth but had the power to distort and hide it. However, there are those who do know this truth and there are also those who do have pride as Lakota but there are not enough and very few truly live and show that pride in a good way.

And the pride I see when I look around is the wrong kind of pride. For the hanging of the stars and stripes I believe is more like a sick co-dependent acknowledgement saying," sure this flag represents the genocide of our people, the theft of our land and our continuing oppression but its ok because were proud to be Americans now." This is not the only "wrong pride" that our Lakota people display but also in the various gang colors that keep our youth divided.

That's like a slap in the face to the old ones and it unknowingly keeps our entire nation and our young people subservient like slaves when they should be as servants for the people, united as brothers and sisters and cousins fighting for the Oyate just as our ancestors always did. But instead they separate themselves from the blood of their past away relatives and fight each other. We were once a great nation of buffalo now we are a nation of cows amidst a vast nation of sheep who are being led by wolves in sheep's clothing and the wool has been pulled over the eyes of the herd. Of course there are the few who are an exception to the rule.

Our collective ignorance as a people has kept us enslaved as a nation imprisoned and only through the acknowledgement of the simple truth can we set ourselves free as a people and as a nation. The youth are the future of us and they will be our leaders of tomorrow. We need to empower them now with nothing less then the absolute truth of our concealed history. Instill in them the four virtues of being a Lakota in relation to the reality of today's dominant world and the reality of our world for the liberation of our Oyate, Woksape, Woohitika, Wounsila, and Wowacintanka. We need real leaders who strive to live close to the true Lakota way, leaders who do see the truth and walk with integrity, leaders who will lead by example and live these qualities of wisdom, bravery, generosity, and fortitude for the Oyate. This could return to us the seemingly almost forgotten pride of being a true Lakota without the false pride and ego but with humility and sincerity.

And this brings me back to this one word, Revolution. All it means is a basic, extreme, thorough change of the foundation of what makes us a people and a nation but this change must be a gradual change because there are many truths that need to be realized and understood. We need to realize the Indian Wars never ended for us and we need to prepare our children for this because when the wasicus, who time after time kept pushing us down, saw that they didn't have to push us anymore they understood that we would keep ourselves and each other down from now on. It is now our choice and our choice alone that will shape our future.

Concert raises money for White Buffalo Calf Woman Society

MISSION - Hoping to stop teen suicide and domestic violence, South Dakota residents and Black Hills visitors opened their hearts and wallets Sunday evening during a free benefit concert for the country's first Native American domestic violence shelter and its many projects including ending the shocking number of recent teenage suicides and attempted suicides on the Lakota Rosebud Reservation.

The concert at the Custer Lutheran Fellowship church featured northern Michigan and Black Hills musicians and raised about $1,000 for the White Buffalo Calf Woman Society in Mission. The funds will be used for preventing domestic violence, sexual assault and teen suicide.

Family string band White water and duet Duo Borealis, both from Michigan's Upper Peninsula, played a wide range of folk music including a "twist" on Amazing Grace that stirred the emotions of the crowd.

The Michigan groups were joined by local singer Roxanne Sazue of Fort Thompson who performed several songs and opened the show warming up the crowd for the visiting musicians. The three acts became one in the end and performed "I Will Fly Away."

The WBCWS was founded 30 years ago by a group of courageous Native women, among them; current executive director Tillie Black Bear who closed the concert by singing a traditional Lakota song in native tongue that captured the hearts of the audience.

The WBCWS serves all battered women and children as it fights family violence, sexual assault and teen suicide.

The Rosebud Tribe has more teen suicide attempts than any other American Indian reservation in the United States, Black Bear said.

The Rosebud Sioux Tribe recently declared a teen suicide "State of Emergency" on the Rosebud Reservation.

Over the past two years, more than 400 attempted suicides and 15 suicides have occurred on the Rosebud Reservation - most involving teenage males.

Poverty, depression, a lack of work, drugs, alcohol and other social problems are among the reasons for the alarming teen suicide problem on the Rosebud reservation, Black Bear said.

A recent report by the U.S. Justice Department outlined an increase in violence against Native Americans.

The Michigan groups traveled 1,000 miles to put on the free benefit concert, and the WBCWS is over 220 miles from the Custer church where the concert took place.

While those involved in the concert live long distances from each other, organizers said they are close on battling domestic violence, teen suicide and sexual assault.

"The connection between Custer and the Rosebud reservation is once again open and strong," said Black Bear.

The pastor of Custer Lutheran Fellowship church said the concert has renewed his congregation's connection to the WBCWS and the Rosebud Reservation.

"We share in the goal of eliminating violence against women and violence in all of our families," said Rev. Dave Van Kley. "We are also strongly committed to reconciliation between native and non-native peoples and hope that this concert was a small step in that direction."

Rev. Hubbard said the WBCWS "does important work at a critical time by creating ways to help end the teen suicide crisis at the Rosebud Reservation and by continuing its many programs to help victims of domestic violence."

Black Bear and Rev. Van Kley both thanked the crowd for donating $1,000 and plan to make the concert an annual event.

$250,000 awarded for fire recovery

PINE RIDGE - The Department of Agriculture has awarded the Pine Ridge reservation and two land owners a grant of $250,000.00 to assist in recovery efforts from the Stampede fire which burned 13,000 acres of the reservation's buffalo pasture land.

The money will be used to rebuild fences and meet the cost to assess the damaged area according to Birgil Kills Straight, Director of the Oglala Sioux parks and recreation program.

Department of Agriculture Under Secretary, Mark Rey, said the funding will help landowners and the Oglala Sioux tribe to refrain from allowing grazing on the burned acres until after November 2008 when it will begin to recover. Kills Straight said that recent rains have helped to begin the recovery process already.

Teen charged with murder of Poor Bear

MUSKOGEE, OKLA.. - Prosecutors filed first-degree murder charges Wednesday against 18-year-old Enrique Pacheco in the Monday death of Shelliegh Poorbear, also 18.

Pacheco is accused of repeatedly stabbing Poorbear, the mother of his 10-month-old son.

The crime is punishable by death, imprisonment for life, or imprisonment for life without parole, the filing by Muskogee County District Attorney Larry Moore states.

Pacheco is being held without bond in the Muskogee County/City Detention Facility.

Pacheco or someone at his residence called police about 10:22 p.m. Monday night telling them they could find a knifing victim in Room 104 of a cheap motel on U.S. 69.

Eight minutes later, Pacheco allegedly left a voice mail on the cell phone of Lisa Tiger, Poorbear's adoptive mother, that made Tiger believe her daughter was dead.

Shelliegh Poor bear

Pacheco was arrested at his home after Poorbear's body was found. A knife believed to be the murder weapon was recovered from the scene, said Muskogee Police Sgt. Greg Martin, an investigator with the department.

Martin said police had been called to a residence on Cherry Street in Muskogee early Sunday. Pacheco had found Poorbear at the residence and was unhappy she was there, Martin said. No arrest was made.

Pacheco later proceeded to burn Poorbear's clothing and clothing belonging to her 17-year-old sister, Kayla, the sister said Tuesday.

Tiger was making arrangements Wednesday afternoon to return her daughter's body to the Porcupine District of the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota for burial near her natural mother's family. Poorbear was Lakota, of the Oglala Sioux tribe.

See Poor Bear's obituary on page B3.

RST election Aug. 23

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) Members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe will vote Thursday in their primary election.

Interest in the tribal president's position is high. Eight men are on the ballot for that office alone.

There are 9 candidates for vice president.

Rosebud voters also will choose tribal council representatives in 13 districts.

Candidates who survive the primary will square off in the October 25 general election.

Bush urged to give Medal of Honor to Keeble

WASHINGTON - In a letter to the White House, U.S. Sen. Tim Johnson urged President Bush to approve a recommendation to posthumously award Master Sergeant Woodrow W. Keeble the Medal of Honor.

Johnson's office received word that Defense Secretary Robert Gates approved the recommendation, and sent it to Bush for his approval, the final step in the process of the award, according to a statement from Johnson's office.

Keeble, a Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux tribal member, would be the first Sioux to receive the honor.

Keeble, who died in 1982, fought in World War II and Korea.

He saved fellow soldiers' lives during the Korean War, a conflict in which Keeble himself was wounded.

He won four Purple Hearts and the Army's second-highest commendation, the Distinguished Service Cross, but the Medal of Honor escaped him because of bureaucratic technicalities at the time.

In loving memory of Jason Lee Two Eagle Wicahpi Wankatiya

It's been four years Aug. 20 since my brother Jason Lee Two Eagle left for the spirit world. Brother, it's been four difficult years without you there. We use to do almost everything together. Laugh at each other, smile at all the funny things we did, cry when something was sad but most of all we were always there for each other.

I miss your laugh your smile, your great sense of humor and your presence.

I love you and miss you everyday with all my love your sister,

LisaTwo Eagle-Richard.

Loving and missing our uncle Jason Lee Two Eagle, we love you and miss you everyday Uncle.

I thought I saw your face today, in the sparkle of the morning sun.
And then I heard the angel say, "Their work on earth is done."
I thought I heard your voice today, then laugh your hearty laugh.
And then I heard the angel say, "There's peace dear one at last."
I thought I felt your touch today, in the breeze that rustled by.
And then I heard the angel say, "The spirit never dies."
I thought I saw my broken heart, in the crescent of the moon.
And then I heard the angel say, "The Lord is coming soon."
I thought that you had left me, for the stars so far above.
And then I heard the angel say, "They left you with their love."
I thought that I would miss you so, and never find my way.
And then I heard the angel say, "They're with you every day."
"The sun, the wind, the moon, the stars, will forever be around, reminding you of the love you shared, and the peace they've finally found."

Love your nieces,
Taeler J and JayLen Rose Snowball

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

My question is: How do you let go of the past and move on? Everybody talks about letting go and moving on, but how?

I was with a man for about five years and we been split up for nine months now. We have two beautiful babies.

Just talking about this makes my stomach hurt and I feel really sad right now.

He was already with someone before I found out that we were broke up. You don't know how hurt I was, and I'm still hurt! (I guess post-partum didn't help things either).

He started doing a lot of drugs (cocaine/marijuana) and drinking A LOT, that was something that I don't do. And this girl he's with, buys it. Do you suppose he really loves her? Or the drugs & drinks?

Why does he like to get treated the way he does?

He gets so blank and she's dragging him around by the hair, hitting him in the face and when he's passed out she's with someone else.

I spoke with him last week and all he talked about was wanting to be drunk, how hard his life was, and how he didn't care about anything. How could anyone be that messed up?

I told him that I wanted his help, financially, with our babies. He said he can't but can buy drinks and drugs everyday. Right now I feel really angry towards him or I should say I hate him.

Many times he asked to come home, I told him no, which really hurt me.

I guess Anna, I don't really know how to move on with my life, there's not a day that goes by that I don't think about him or the things we used to do-the good things.

I told myself that I won't get involved with anyone until I am healed from this, how long does this take, will there be somebody?

Why am I so hurt by this relationship, there were others but why do I feel the way I do?

I really hope that I hear from you, I need help or direction--something.

Lost and Confused.

Dear Lost and Confused:

He sounds absolutely charming - no wonder you still long after him. I know that I want a man that has turned over his life to drugs and alcohol - because that is such a good way to live.

I love having no money, being angry, and spending all of my time telling someone how miserable they are "making me."

What you have forgotten is that you do have control over yourself and your life. You are not a victim of someone else's problems. Women, in particular, want to spend a lot of time crying about the miserable man in their life.

It is a bad habit. As bad as drinking and drugs because it literally controls your life and daily motives.

Letting go is easy. It is a decision. You are the one that makes decisions in your life. There are lots of "processes" people use to finally be able to make a decision, but I usually employ my brain and power of observation combined with the love of creating a better life for myself.

Accept these things and quit arguing with yourself.

You cannot change anybody except yourself. You cannot continue to cry over the disappointment of a dream that will not be created with this man. He is who he is and he does what he does. People engaged with drugs and alcohol are owned by those substances. T heir spirit is subverted and the spirit of alcohol and drugs take over. There is nothing that you can do about that.

Once you accept him as he is, understanding that he is creating a life for himself that is far different than what you want for yourself and you let go of your anger with him for victimizing you the real healing begins.

Nobody did anything to you. You have to be honest with yourself.

You knew certain things about him when you got involved with him. You continued to be associated with him deep into his relationship with drugs and alcohol.

What did you think the outcome would be?

As you said, he is a mess. Accept that, and then accept that it is YOU that doesn't want a man in her life that is a mess.

Quit asking yourself why he puts up with demeaning treatment from the other woman. He does that because he has low self-esteem, which he has earned by acting in a low way. Let it be.

Someday, he may recover. He will have to make a decision someday whether to live or die. He will have to find a way to value himself. You are part of what he lost along the way. That is part of what he deserves and it is part of what will help him become so miserable that he will want to live better.

Mostly what you are holding onto is the anger and resentment you feel for him, and the blame that is easier to give out than to accept the responsibility for placing yourself in the position you placed yourself within.

Human beings (every single one of us) are very strong.

We literally create our lives, day by day, moment by moment. We attract that which we believe in, and we attract that which our spirit needs to move us into clearer understanding (In other words, we create lessons for ourselves to learn).

Make your decision. Retrain your mind. Be okay with today, because it is all you every really have. Go forward and "see" yourself in a better life, because you can create one.

You will have another love (or more) in your life. Do yourself a favor and choose better. Live now, in gratefulness for the experience and lesson, and go forward without fear.

Blessings to you.

Dear Anna,

I wrote to you a few months ago about my daughter who had had a couple of accidents and how we were having a difficult time deciding whether she would be alright driving again.

I'm just writing to give you an update: She has been driving since then and has been doing fine. She's had a difficult time finding a job.

She applied at all the regular fast food places, but I think other people (those who did the hiring) couldn't get past her speech impediment and didn't see her as being as capable as she really is and, because math is such a weak area for her, they did not want to hire her for cashiering type positions. She was getting very discouraged. I suggested that she apply for a job at a nursing home only a mile away from us and she got a part-time job as a dietary aide and will start tomorrow. (Yea!)

There are still difficulties she's trying to overcome, she's repeating a basic math course at a community college this semester which she failed last semester (she's on a 6th grade level) and which she needs to pass just to get to the more difficult math courses for her culinary arts certificate.

She has said that if she doesn't pass math this semester, she might consider becoming a certified nurses aide, so we'll see what happens.

Either way, she's a great young woman and we couldn't be more proud of her determination, character and perseverance.

Anyway, I just wanted to give you an update and to say thanks a bunch for the advice. We did put the insurance in her name and she's going to pay for half (since it's pretty high) once she starts getting her paychecks. We still worry occasionally...well, a little more than occasionally, but we're trying to let go and let her grow. By the way, I continue to enjoy reading your column. Take care and keep the great advice coming.

Dear Mother of Wonderful Daughter:

Thank you for your kind words. Please find a tutor for your daughter. I think you can get somebody through your local college or even through one of the high schools. You daughter needs a thorough understanding of fractions.

How many quarter cups in a full cup? For instance: If you only have a quarter cup measuring device, and you have to put in two and a quarter cups of flour, how many quarter cups does that take?

Hands on "showing" will help her learn these concepts, which she can learn to translate to math language.

I also feel that she would be excellent working with children. Cecelia Fire Thunder is a great example of a woman that never allowed a hearing or speech impediment to stop her from going after her dream.

Your daughter will feel better knowing that she also, can create her own dream, live her own successful life and enjoy her own success.

To help her, all she has to know is that it is possible. Loving blessings to you dear, and a hug for your driving daughter.

Dear Anna,

I am sick of working for a bunch of quarreling jealou-hearted sick women. Everyone has a motive and all they want to do is complain about other co-workers to make themselves look better. What do you see?

Mad at the stupidity

Dear Mad:

I see you getting together with three other women and one man and beginning a new program for after school activities for the youth on the rez. This may be one of the most important activities for the youth today.

Have you noticed an increase in gang membership and activities since the "YO" was discontinued on the Pine Ridge Reservation? I have.

Think about it and get going. There is nothing that you can do about the personality illnesses of insecurity that you work with except to move on.

Good Luck!

BID

The Bureau of Indian Affairs, Fort Berthold Agency is planning to conduct an Oil and Gas Sale within the next two (2) months. We will be offering all unleased allotted mineral acreage to the highest bidder through a competitive sealed bid process. We have established the primary terms of the lease as follows:

Minimum bonus per acre $75.00
Minimum annual rental rate per acre $2.50
Minimum royalty rate per acre 18%
Primary term of the lease 5 years

The approval of a mineral lease on the Fort Berthold Reservation is based on majority consent, under special authority enacted in 1998 and 1999, and codified under 25 U.S.C. 396. Upon completion of the competitive bid sale, leases will become effective, once the required number of owners have consented to lease and approved by the BIA Superintendent.

This decision is based upon the fact that Fort Berthold Agency has received numberous requests from prospective lessees to lease certain allotted minerals. Several lessees have been acquiring signatures for negotiated oil and gas leases on the Fort Berthold Reservation. While this attempt has been made in good faith, we feel it would be in the best interests of the allotted mineral owners to include their lands in an advertised lease sale in order to receive the optimum bonus consideration through competitive bid. We recommend the allotted mineral owners who are in negotiations for an oil and gas lease to give full consideration to this alternate option.

Those allotted mineral owners who do not wish to have their lands advertised in this competitive bid lease sale, please contact the Fort Berthold Agency in writing within (2) weeks of the date of this notice.

Our mailing address is as follows: Superintendent, PO Box 370, New Town, ND 58763. Our telephone number is (701) 627-4707.

Signed,
Earl Silk,
Superintendent

Shannon County Schools authorized for virtual high school

Less than 30% of eighth grade graduates finish high school

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

Dr. Curt Voight

BATESLAND - "Over the past year, before I came to work for Shannon County, I was involved in a study looking at tracking the eighth graduates from Batesland, Wolf Creek, Rockyford and Red Shirt," said Dr. Curt Voight, new superintendent of Shannon County schools, "we found that less than 30 percent of the eighth graduates finished high school; that is a terrible situation for both the student and the health of the community."

On Aug. 17, the State of South Dakota approved Shannon County schools for a virtual high school and the school board met Monday at Red Shirt to give the go ahead for the new high school.

"After interviewing a number of Shannon County school's graduates who had dropped out of high school, we realized that most of them were still living here on the reservation," said Voight, "if they are going to be responsible and successful members of the community, they really need to graduate high school at a minimum."

Schools victorious in settlement with BIE on reorganization

RAPID CITY - After filing a lawsuit a little over one year ago, and obtaining a preliminary injunction against the US Dept. Of Interior and the Bureau of Indian Education in July, Indian tribes and tribal schools have finally reached a settlement with the government that will stop major portions of the proposed reorganization of the Office of Indian Education and leave educational resources on Indian reservations, announced lead attorney Charles Abourezk.

"It is a tremendous and historic victory for the tribes and tribal schools of the Dakotas," said Abourezk. "Education Line Offices and resources that support contract, grant and BIA schools will remain on Indian reservations, rather than having them transferred to urban areas and state capitals."

The tribes and tribal schools contended that there was insufficient tribal consultation under the law prior to the proposed reorganization. The former Office of Indian Education Programs of the BIA, now called the BIE, was going to reorganize the entire structure of BIE in a move that would have cost over $11 million, and would have taken monies from at least two programs serving Indian children, Abourezk said. It also would have moved all Education Line officers and offices, as well as support personnel, to urban areas and state capitals, forcing tribes and tribal schools, as well as support personnel, to travel great distances to obtain educational support.

"It was always our contention during the lawsuit that the government intended to centralize in order to make it easier on BIE personnel, and to locate in state capitals in an effort to eventually transfer some of the func-

Bordeaux and Boyd lead in recount

Wayne Boyd

ROSEBUD - In the Rosebud Sioux tribal primary race for the office of president, the initial unofficial ballot count had Cyril "Whitey" Scott in second place and behind first place, incumbent RST president, Rodney M. Bordeaux.

However, a recount conducted early evening Friday by the RST Election Committee held in the RST council chambers, RST vice-president Louis "Wayne" Boyd, came out ahead of Scott and will advance to the general election in October along with Bordeaux.

Boyd initially was tied with Webster Two Hawk, Sr., however, after the recount Boyd pulled ahead by one vote and re-affirmed the notion that every vote really does count.

The unofficial results have been conspicuously posted tions of the federal government to state education offices," Abourezk said. "In the process, they were going to pull all of the Education Line Offices from the reservations. We always said that the only reason that BIE has for its existence is to serve Indian children and Indian education, so this proposal was ridiculous on its face."

The idea for a lawsuit came about as a result of a meeting held in Rapid City during a Great Plains Tribal Chairmens Association conference. Chairman Robert Cournoyer of the Yankton Sioux Tribe, then-Chairman Harold Frazier of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, and President Ceceila Fire Thunder of the Oglala Sioux Tribe met with Charles Abourezk in Rapid City and decided to proceed with a lawsuit, Abourezk said. The Yankton Sioux Tribe agreed to bear the initial brunt of the cost of the litigation, as long as the other tribes and tribal schools contributed.

US District Court Judge Karen Schreier of Rapid City issued a preliminary injunction last summer against the proposed restructuring, but applied it only to the Dakotas.

When word spread about the lawsuit, tribes in the Southwest contacted Abourezk and asked for information on the lawsuit. The Pueblo tribes of New Mexico and the Navajo Nation then followed with their own lawsuits against BIE and the Department of Interior.

"This created tremendous pressure on the BIE," Abourezk said. A settlement conference was held in December, 2006 in Rapid City. The tribes and tribal schools met for two days prior to the settlement conference with Abourezk, who represented the Yankton Sioux Tribe and a number of other tribes and tribal schools, Cheyenne River Sioux Tribal attorney Rebecca Kidder, Julian Brown, attorney for the Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, and Steve Emery, attorney for the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe. The group came up with a complex negotiating position.

The former head of BIE, Thomas Dowd, flew out to Rapid City with staff and attorneys from the Department of Justice and Department of Interior, and met face-to-face with the tribal chairmen and tribal school administrators and board members from the Dakotas in a 12 hour negotiation session. A tentative settlement was reached, but the written settlement agreement took a number of months to complete and was finally signed on July 18, 2007.

The agreement, according to Abourezk, requires that the BIE maintain the six existing Education Line Offices on the reservations in the Dakotas, that during the next fiscal year the BIE will hire and maintain at least three employees at each of the six Line Offices, and that a total of at least 24 employees will always be maintained.

In addition, the Flandreau Indian School will be transferred from the Minneapolis Education Line Office to one in South Dakota.

More importantly, said Abourezk, the agreement sets up tribal participation in a series of consultation protocols that will set out how consultation policy is implemented. It will also require involvement of tribes and tribal schools in the hiring of new Education Line Office staff.

Finally, the agreement sets up a working group comprised of agreed-upon delegates from tribes and tribal schools in the Dakotas, and the Director of BIE. This working group will discuss ongoing issues of concern to tribes and tribal educators. A letter accompanying the agreement also guarantees that there will be no retaliation against any of the tribal schools or tribes because of the lawsuit.

The Department of Interior also agreed to pay a significant portion of the legal fees of the tribal plaintiffs in the lawsuit. The federal court will keep jurisdiction over the case to enforce its provisions.

"I had a great team of attorneys working with me, especially Rebecca Kidder, as well as Julian Brown and Steve Emery," said Abourezk. "One of the unfortunate aspects of this whole process was that after we established a very good working relationship with BIE director Thomas Dowd, whom we greatly respected and trusted, he resigned this summer. I think I speak for all the tribes and tribal schools in the Dakotas in saying that we deeply regret his resignation and will miss his leadership style and commitment to tribal education."

Whirlwind Soldier third, Mendoza seventh in Douglas Earlybird run

Girls chased off course by lightening

BOX ELDER - The varsity girls hit the 1,300 meter mark of the Douglas Earlybird 4,000 meter run on Friday when lightening forced officials to call off the run to protect the safety of the athletes. Virtual high school

School will not be your traditional high school, added Voight; the school will not be a high school with a physical setting but will be using computers and the internet to complete classwork using the current attendance centers already in existence - schools in Batesland, Wolf Creek, Rockyford and Red Shirt to earn credits for a high school diploma.

"We are not talking about creating this high school from scratch, currently the state has about 108 classes that are established and are offered on the internet and authorizing Shannon County for a high school allows us to register students for those classes and to grant credit towards a high school degree," said Voight, "our goal is to find a space at our current schools, fill the room with notebook computers with internet access and stay open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday and maybe 9 a.m. to 12 noon or 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday to provide students with an opportunity to enroll and work on their high school classes on the computer."

Currently there are a number of providers who offer classes that are taught by qualified professionals, aligned to state standards and meet the state's high academic standards. Apex, a national online company, Black Hills State University and Northern State University, DIAL out of Mitchell and the Rapid City School District are all providers of courses for the virtual high school across the state. A class list of approved courses is available online at www.sdvhs.k12.sd.us.

Eligible students would not be charged for the classes; each class runs from $200-350 and the cost would be covered by Shannon County Schools who in turn would be reimbursed through the South Dakota Board of Regents based on so much per full time equivalent student. Students who were enrolled in one of the high schools on the reservation would be eligible to take virtual classes as well, as long as they are eligible.

"The key to this type of school is not 'seat time' but demonstrating proficiency in either the knowledge or skills required by each class," said Voight, "we plan to have a traveling registrar going from school to school to get interested students enrolled for courses; we do not have the resources to get each student their own notebook computer and the necessary internet access so we are making our schools as accessible as possible."

"I hope we are able to go out and recruit as many students as possible for this new school," said Todd O'Bryan, school board member, "this is a great opportunity for a student to work on a high school diploma."

Interested students or parents may contact the principal of any of the schools that make up Shannon County schools or call Vicki Grant, Shannon County Schools curriculum developer and now high school principal at the Shannon County schools main office in Batesland or calling 288-1921.

"We are hoping to hit the ground running and get as many students signed up during the first three weeks of September," said Voight, "students will need a transcript from any high school that they attended and if they still live with a parent, the parent will need to sign off on the registration."

Imprint to premier in Rapid City Sept. 14

PINE RIDGE - Imprint, a locally produced supernatural thriller shot at the 777 Ranch and on Pine Ridge Reservation, is premiering at Carmike 10 in Rapid City on September 14. A premier is also planned for Pine Ridge Reservation for September 15. Lead actress Tonantzin Carmelo (Into the West), as well as other stars from the film, will be in attendance at both premiers.

Tokala Clifford plays the part of Nathaniel Stonefeather and Charlie White Buffola, the part of Sam Stonefeather.

Local production company Linn Productions, along with a smart and talented cast, weave Native mythologies into this Sixth Sense-style supernatural thriller.

Executive Producer Carolyn Linn is working with Carmike Theatres to release the movie regionally. Carmike has digital capabilities in many of its theatres nationwide, including at three locations in South Dakota, making it less expensive for independent filmmakers to release their work because 35 mm prints aren't needed.

Following the Rapid City premier, releases are planned on 17 screens in North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Nebraska, and Colorado.

Tonanztin Carmelo (Into the West) stars as Native American attorney Shayla Stonefeather, who prosecutes a Lakota teen in a controversial murder trial. When she returns home after the trial, strange visions and ghostly voices propel her on an unexpected journey. Though Shayla initially rejects a spiritual explanation for her experiences, she begins to uncover what she believes is a link between the visions and her brother's disappearance two years earlier.

Determined to get to the bottom of the mystery, Shayla deliberately confronts and follows the apparitions, leading her to a horrifying revelation and a purpose she could never have foreseen.

Michael Linn and Keith Davenport wrote the screenplay, Michael Linn directed, Marc Linn assistant directed, and Chris Eyre and Linn Productions produced the movie.

Tonantzin Carmelo (Into the West), Carla-Rae Holland, Michael Spears (Into the West), and Cory Brusseau star in the movie. Other local actors include Charlie White Buffalo, Chief Dave Bald Eagle, Scott Means, Beau Little Sky, Alec Morgan, Gary Garnette, Jodi Janis, Robert Old Horse, Emmanuel Black Bear, Tim Black Bear, Juan Mesteth, Brandon McBride.

Cultural advisors were Charlie White Buffalo and Larry Pourier.

Special Premier Tickets, for the premier showing and the after party, are available at Linn Productions.

The trailer can be viewed at www.imprintmovie.com. Images and footage are available.

A Sicangu Perspective

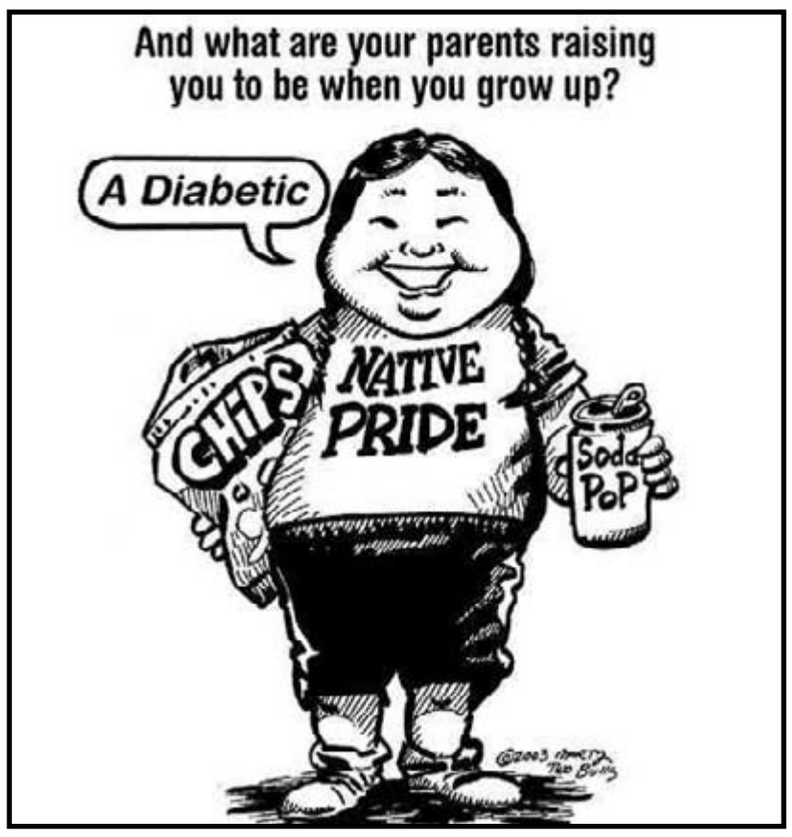
Mourning our descent toward assimilation and the loss of our identity

Set the blood quantum at one-quarter, hold to it as rigid definition of Indians, let intermarriage proceed as it had for centuries, and eventually Indians will be defined out of existence. When that happens, the federal government will be freed of its persistent "Indian problem."
Historian Patricia Nelson Limerick, The Legacy of Conquest: The Unbroken Past of the American West.

By Lydia Whirlwind Soldier

I held on to and still have real hope for the preservation of our culture, our bloodlines and our tribal life ways. The passage of linear descent for Sicangu tribal members makes it more difficult to imagine how we will survive this next stage of our assimilation into American society. We cannot blame anyone but ourselves for the direction we have taken toward termination and/or assimilation because those decisions are happening within our own tribe. We have done it too ourselves with the Rosebud Sioux Tribal secretarial election.

On the day of the secretarial election for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe I went to the community hall at 8:30 a.m. to vote and found the place deserted. I drove up to the BIA office, eleven miles away and found it closed with a sign posted stating that the office would be closed because of the secretarial election. I listened to KINI the local radio station but could not find the information I needed. I then went to the tribal office and asked around until I finally found one person who held up a sheet of paper and said that was what she received from BIA after contacting them several times. The paper listed the voting places and the time stated for voting was from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. I then drove back to the community hall and found that the BIA people finally arrived. I asked them who was in charge and they said they didn't know. I asked them what time the voting polls were expected to open and again they told me they didn't know. However, this should not have been a surprise because this is the way such things happen when more and more of our assets and identity are chipped away.



Things didn't work out well in many ways concerning this secretarial election. The Tribal Council didn't take seriously the issue of tribal enrollment. It is the council's duty as tribal leaders to protect, preserve and perpetuate our tribal membership instead of sitting back and being a part of the assimilation mentality. The council could have taken the issue of tribal enrollment off the secretarial ballot by stating tribal enrollment is non-negotiable. The majority of council members didn't vote in the secretarial election.

Ultimately, tribal enrollment will determine the future of tribal government and the future of our tribe. The actual reason for the push for linear descent is centered on assets, land and financial resources, scholarships and other advantages that should rightfully go to real (as opposed to wannabees) Sicangu Lakota. The effects and changes of this secretarial vote will be felt by the younger generations from this time forward. Only time will tell the type of commitment these new Rosebud Sioux have for our people and tribe.

It also seems strange that people didn't want to change the name of the Rosebud Sioux to Sicangu Lakota. A statement was made by more than one person, "Why would we want to change it to Sicangu Lakota? I can't even pronounce it." How many generations did it take for these people to lose their pride, their cultural identity and historical bonds? At what point did these people forget who they are and sadder still many have never known the goodness and privilege of being Sicangu Lakota. There will be many more surprises in store for us as we plunge like lemmings over the cliff of assimilation.

While the creators and supporters of the secretarial election celebrate, this Sicangu Lakota will be mourning our descent toward assimilation and the loss of our identity defined by our bloodlines.

Genocide is defined first of all as a crime, "committed with intent to destroy, in whole or in part, a national, ethnical, racial or religious group as such." I think this is what we have done to ourselves - it is all disheartening.

Finding My Voice

What happened to the 7th Cavalry flag from Little Big Horn?

Dana Badmilk

Recently I played Indian scout to some chaps from across the pond. Their article was well written and was published in the English newspaper The Guardian, but despite some small errors, such as my dad being a medicine man, he is not, but instead is heyoka. This is someone who lives their life contrary or backwards to show the youth how not to be. They are of the Thunder Spirits.

My dad also does not have scars on his chest from the Sundance. As a heyoka, his scars are on his back. And another mistake was when Paul Harris wrote, "The hills were given to the Indians in a treaty, but shortly after they were invaded by miners looking for gold." As Tim Giago pointed out to me, they were not given to us, but we retained the rights to the hills according to the Treaties of 1851 and 1868 and they were ours until they were seized illegally by an Act of the 44th Congress in 1877.

This is something we are passionate about today as some of you can recall from my past writings.

"That might not be true for long. For the real thing that unites all Indian tribes - whether the children of Bob Lone Elk or those of Hatcher-White - is the gradual creep of mainstream American culture into their youth. " and "It would be ironic if, after centuries of bloodshed, oppression and poverty, what could really spell the end of Indian Country is MTV, a Big Mac and acceptance."

The writer is wrong because this will not happen to my people and here is why:

Our culture is too strong. The wrongs that have been done to us still hurt us to this day. We live our lives knowing and damn proud of the fact that our tribe defeated Custer and the 7th Calvary. In fact it is a tribal holiday . . . Lakota Victory Day . . . and people have big dinners and celebrations on this day.

And we live our lives knowing that the Massacre at Wounded Knee was revenge for Lakota Victory Day. It is not about Ghost Dances. That was an excuse. The 300 men, women, and children slaughtered at Wounded Knee were killed as an act of revenge for taking down the 7th Calvary. Why does the flag of the 7th Calvary still fly? Why is there still a 7th Calvary when they were defeated?

In a recent email to the 7th Calvary I asked;

"I was wondering why the Wounded Knee Massacre was listed in your timeline as a Battle, when clearly history shows it was a Massacre.

It was changed on the sign at Wounded Knee, why is it still listed as a battle on your records? Clearly, everyone knows it was a massacre.

Why was the flag of the 7th Calvary flown at Wounded Knee when it was taken from Custer when he was defeated at the Little Big Horn?

This was their reply:

Dana,

Thanks for contacting us. First we do not re-write history, and wounded knee was indeed a battle for the men serving in the unit at that time. The 7th Cavalry regimental Standard was NEVER Taken in Battle, in fact all unit Standards are cased before army units go into battle.

Bear with me...here was my next question:

I am replying to your last email. I am doing research on locating the 7th Calvary flag and the US flag that flew at Little Big Horn. Since these were never taken in battle, as you claim, where do they sit today? (Research for an article I am writing)

Thank you,
Dana Lonehill

This was their reply:
Dana,

I am working on it. and also getting the advice from other Historians. As of this morning and from the book "Of Garryowen in Glory"

I found this.

Two of the three flags of Colonel George Armstrong Custer and the Seventh Cavalry at the Battle of Little Big Horn (Custer's Last Stand). Swallow tailed standard Cavalry guidon of that era, 1876.

Custer also had a personal headquarters flag. It was also swallow-tailed of equal horizontal stripes of red over blue with two crossed white sabres in the centre. This flag was made by the Colonel's wife.

Both the Cavalry Standard Guidon and the personal flag were carried into the battle.

The third flag was the regimental standard.

This flag resembled the modern state flag of North Dakota, with the exception of the inscription in gold on the red ribbon which read, 7th U.S. Cavalry.

That flag was not carried into the battle.

Swallow tailed standard Cavalry guidon and Custer's personal flag and troop guidons were never seen again.

Of course that doesn't tell me what happened to the flag. And then I get another email from the 7th Calvary:

Dana,

You can confirm the information thru the Center of military History. "Old, worn. frayed standards that are replaced are sent to the Center of Military History. Like the Stars & Stripes, most likely burned.

The disappearance of the Seventh Cavalry's two battle flags and six company guidons at the Little Big Horn.

Neither the Stars and Stripes or the Regimental Standard, were at the battle of the Little Big Horn

They were (en cased) with the pack train.

1. Swallow tailed Cavalry guidon of that era, 1876.

2. Custer's personal battle flag.

It was also swallow-tailed of equal horizontal stripes of red over blue with two crossed white sabres in the center.

3. six company guidon's.

These Flags were never to be seen again.

The Seventh Cavalry Regimental standard on display at the battlefield visitor's center was from the officers of the Seventh and not the one with the pack train.

In 1957 the 7th Cavalry Regimental Standard was permanently "cased" and replaced with 3 "newly" created Squadron Standards. Today there are 5 Standards, one for each of the 5 Squadrons that are on active today.

Jim Savage
The 7th United States Cavalry Association

Again, that does not answer my question, "Where are the flags that were in the Battle Of Little Big Horn?"

I even wrote to the Smithsonian and was told they don't know where the flags are.

But my dad, my uncle, my grandfather, my husband, my brother, believe that whenever the oral history of the Battle of The Little Big Horn is told (Or the Battle of Greasy Grass) all say, "We took that flag, that flag is ours. We rode out of that battle with that flag." You can ask anyone, and they will tell you the same thing. The victorious Lakota took that flag.

That was the only time the US Military was defeated on their own

Notes From Indian Country

The smell of a deep fried Snicker

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

With the annual state fairs popping up around this country some fair managers are looking to eliminate the greasy, trans fat meals served by the food vendors. Apparently, "commod bods" are going out of fashion.

For example, the Indiana State Fair decided to remove all trans fat from the goodies it serves each year. Now one can indulge their hearty appetites for deep-fried Snicker bars, deep-fried pickles and deep-fried Oreo cookies without worrying about tans fat. Deep fried pickles? Yuck!

Neither New Mexico nor South Dakota has caught on to this latest healthy trend because at last week's Santa Fe Indian Market I saw many shoppers wandering around with grease dripping from their artery clogging clumps of Indian fry bread. And this grease was loaded with trans fat. Talk about a "commod bod" waiting to happen!

But as one blogger put it last week, "What the heck, it only happens once-a-year so bring on the funnel cakes and the fried bread."

The New Mexico State Fair is about to kick off and the expected 700,000 visitors will purchase goods and food from 525 vendors. It runs from September 7 to September 23 and I have not read anything about the elimination of trans fat as yet. With its world famous Indian Village, I suppose you can check your arteries at the main gate because the fry bread will be plentiful and packed with trans fats.

Was it my imagination or were there fewer artists and craftsmen present from the very wealthy casino tribes at the Santa Fe Indian Market?

Don't get me wrong. I believe the casinos have done wonders to lift the poorest people in America up from the dungeons of poverty. But I have observed that with a lot of money also comes a lot of apathy; apathy towards the culture, the traditions, the crafts and the arts seems to be growing more common among those people from the Indian nations with very large and very profitable casinos. The people of the 19 Pueblos have, for centuries, maintained a very close relationship with their spirituality and traditions. If there are any Indian tribes in America that will be the least effected by sudden wealth, it will be the people of the Pueblo, the Hopi and the Lakota.

But I do not see the same commitment and dedication in other parts of Indian country. My daughter, while a student at the University of Minnesota, told me that the people of college age that she met from some of the local Minnesota tribes had little or no interest in attaining a higher education. One young man told her that he was getting more money every month than he could possibly spend so what good would college do him?

Sadly, these are the future leaders of their nation and it is they who will replace the elders that fought long and hard to bring them the wealth they now enjoy. It is true that many of the elders did not have a college education because they grew up at a time when college was a luxury they could not afford. They learned the P's and Q's of tribal government and leadership in the school of hard knocks. But in the process they learned their own history and they knew the strength of the culture and traditions. At one time it was all they had.

There are those people from the new tribes back East that grew up in poverty, but they never had the connection to their culture because of assimilation. They have become very wealthy by way of their geography and I must give them credit for trying to re-connect with a culture they never knew. They are building museums and making every effort to revive a culture that had been nearly destroyed. Now they have the money to pursue these goals.

But I digress. Now back to those fat-soaked foods. Whenever I go to a fair I am hard pressed to ignore the tempting, but unhealthy cuisine.

When I visit the Indian Village at the New Mexico State Fair next week I will be sorely tempted to treat myself to a deep-fried Oreo cookie. But I think I will settle for the turkey leg instead. Much healthier. But I will surely crave one of those trans fat soaked Snicker bars. Yummy!

soil and not too long after this defeat, they took the lives of more than 300 unarmed men, women and children at Wounded Knee.

This is why we don't forget. This is why the Big Mac will never be the end of us. We can't be mainstream because of our pride, our history, and our culture. This runs deeper than anyone will ever know. This is why generations and generations later, we still remember this.

It must be easy to be "mainstream" and embrace "mainstream" when you have the money to do so. The Lakota are not fortunate in that way. We do not have manicured yards, but we are so much more fortunate in many other ways. We have our history, our courage, and no matter what anyone says, we have that flag of the 7th Calvary in our hearts.

Red Cloud downs Pine Ridge in Custer Invitational championship

By Tom Crash

CUSTER - Pine Ridge and Red Cloud ended up being seeded number one and two following pool play Friday in the Custer Invitational volleyball tournament but in bracket play on Saturday, Red Cloud built up some momentum in the first two rounds and used that to beat Pine Ridge 25-22 and 25-21 in the championship match late Saturday afternoon.

"We played well but more importantly, we played together as a team," said Robin Johnson, Red Cloud's head coach; " our two seniors, Ida Clark and Lisa Bear Robe provided leadership when we needed it, Desirae Blacksmith was a tough server and Marque Lunderman was solid all over the floor, when we made mistakes we didn't let it get us down, it was a good team effort."

Red Cloud beat Moorcroft, Wyo. in the first round 25-18 and 25-16 and Newell in the semis 25-22 and 25-23. Pine Ridge downed Rapid City Christian 25-16 and 25-20 in the first round and beat Custer 27-25 and 25-18 in the semis.

Newell knocked off Custer for third, New Underwood got by Edgemont for fifth and Moorcroft beat RC Christian for seventh place.

Pine Ridge earned their number one seed coming out of pool play by going 6-1 in games and defeating Rapid City Christian 25-18, 25-16, beating Custer 17-25, 25-12 and 25-23 and downing Edgemont 25-17 and 25-21. Lacey Weston, Saadia Tasso, Allie Janis, Becka Ten Fingers, Dusti Michaud and Lianne Ten Fingers start for the Lady Thorpes.

Red Cloud earned the number two seed for the bracket play by getting by Moorcroft 25-23, 25-15, outlasting New Underwood 25-23, 22-25 and 25-18 and beating Newell 25-17, 24-26 and 25-19. Danielle Locust and Amber Steele rounded out the starting lineup with Charity Wilson and Amber Blacksmith coming off the bench.

Red Cloud hosted Belle Fourche on Tuesday and suffered a bit of a letdown losing to the Lady Broncs 25-10, 22-25, 25-20 and 25-20; they host a triangular with Hay Springs and Crawford on Thursday while Pine Ridge hosts St. Francis on Thursday, Todd County on Sept. 6 and Little Wound on Sept. 18.

Local football season opens Friday

Playoff teams Todd County, Red Cloud, Pine Ridge, Little Wound looking to build on last year's success

PINE RIDGE - Little Wound went to the second round of the playoffs last year while Pine Ridge, Red Cloud and Todd County all made it to the first round of the South Dakota state football playoffs. Billy Scott, Red Cloud, with 1,224 yards from scrimmage and Gunner Krogman, Todd County, with 1,151 yards were two of the best running backs in the state last year in 11 man football, both are back for their senior years. Darrel Hunter of Little Wound and Bob Kornely of Todd County are back to coach while Keith Ferguson is the new coach at Red Cloud and Sam Bravo replaces Dave Michaud at Pine Ridge. All of the teams have set their sights on returning to the playoffs and improving their finish this year.

"We are going to take it one game at a time and if we stay healthy and play hard each game we'll be able to compete with anyone on our schedule," said Bob Kornely who is starting his 14th year in coaching and his 8th as head coach, "we need to be patient, we have the playmakers and the ability to overcome missed assignments or mistakes but we need to be patient and we'll make the plays."

Todd County was 5-3 last year and lost to Little Wound in the first round of the playoffs. According to Kornely, Todd County returns a solid senior corps that will provide leadership for the team including Krogman at running back and as linebacker, CJ Spotted Tail at quarterback, Aaron Stoddard fullback, Mike Neiss wingback and Jaden Allen at tight end. The offenwsive ,line includes one senior, Raymond Wright, three juniors Dusty Old Lodge, Seth Larvae and Josh Larsen and one sophomore Thorne Oliver.

On defense, Todd County will feature Neiss and sophomore Canku One Star at defensive backs, a linebacking crew of Krogman, Stoddard, Allen ,Noah Kilonzo and Jesus Duran. A number of athletes will be auditioning for two open slots on the defensive line joining Lloyd One Star, Josh Larsen and Seth Larvae.

"We should be a favorite for both the West River and the All Nations conferences this year, yes there is a sense of excitement about the upcoming year," said Kornely.

Red Cloud was 5-3 last year and lost to St. Thomas More in the first round of the playoffs; Nick Dressel was instrumental in helping to turn the football program around at Red Cloud and with his elevation to the high school principal position has focused his energy on his new position an won't be on the sidelines this year. Keith Ferguson is the new coach, he has been an assistant football coach at the junior high level in Chadron for the past two years and is currently finishing up his bachelors degree at Chadron State College while working for the Talent Search Program out of the University of South Dakota.

"We have a solid crew at the skill positions including Billy Scott at running back, Wade O'Bryan at fullback, Art Vitalis and Christian McGhee at wide receivers and Dave Giago at tight end," said Ferguson, "we are starting sophomore Jeremy Blacksmith at quarterback with junior Henry Crow as his backup."

"We have a great senior class, we have speed at the skill positions, our seniors are leading by example and we expect a really good year," said Ferguson who has had a steady 40-50 athletes practicing each day, "we have implemented a new offense and defense so we will progress week to week; our players came in ready to work hard, it should be an exciting year."

Red Cloud opens their season at Bennett County on Friday night, Pine Ridge hosts Todd County and Little Wound hosts St. Francis Friday afternoon.

The 131st annual Rosebud Fair wacipi contest results

ROSEBUD - The annual event saw a very good turnout of visitors and local wacipi contestants, softball players and rodeo cowboys.

The carnival attracted the usual crowd of children and parents, alike, as most of the rides were the ones seen last year.

The wacipi, which is at the heart of the Rosebud Fair, saw the participation of the Sicangu Lakota Warriors, Wild Horse Butte color guard from Martin and the Chauncey Eagle Horn Post. On Saturday, Rep. Stephanie Herseth was the honored guest as her host, Michael LaPointe, Chief of Staff for RST president Rodney M. Bordeaux, escorted her to the wacipi arena.

Many people were impressed at Herseth's usage of several key Lakota phrases in her speech to the powwow audience. She has been a vocal advocate of tribal and veteran's affairs on the state and national scene.

On Saturday, Marcella Prue of Antelope community honored her daughter, Lt. Col. Kathy Prue-Owens who was home on leave. Kathy recently earned her Ph.D. in nursing at the University of Arizona. District 3 Antelope council representative,Robert Moore, read a proclamation from the Office of Governor, Mike Rounds. Rodney M. Bordeaux read a Rosebud Sioux proclamation.

Nebraskans for Peace to protest White Clay beer distributor

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - Activists concerned about the high rate of alcoholism on Pine Ridge have planned a protest with beer distributors in Scottsbluff.

The protest planned by Nebraskans for Peace is scheduled for Thursday at High Plains Budweiser. It is one of several distributors that deliver beer to the handful of stores in Whiteclay, population 14, that sell more than 4 million cans of beer annually, mostly to American Indians who walk or drive to the village from the nearby reservation, which is officially dry.

To date, Nebraskans for Peace has mainly garnered attention by staging beer blockades just outside Whiteclay aimed at keeping beer from entering the reservation. Now the group is going after beer distributors for participating in what it calls "broader economic collusion that enables dealers in Whiteclay to operate."

"Given the high volume of sales daily taking place in this remote border town ... the four Whiteclay dealers, on their own, could not possibly sustain an operation of this scale without outside assistance," Nebraskans for Peace said in a statement. "Somebody else is supplying the suppliers, meaning the mechanics for maintaining the alcohol supply in this ... hamlet extend much deeper into the state."

The group says beer distributors are "peddling poison."

Though it is not legally or contractually required to deliver beer to the Whiteclay stores, the company has a policy of delivering products to all the dealers in its area, said Jeff Scheinost, owner and general manager of High Plains.

"I have an assigned territory and they're in my assigned territory," said Scheinost.

The reservation has one of the highest alcoholism-related mortality rates in the country, and Nebraskans for Peace says the alcoholism rate is about 80 percent.

"The reservation lies in South Dakota," Scheinost said when asked about the group's allegation that his company contributes to alcoholism on the reservation. "I have no control over what happens on the reservation. We support responsible drinking by responsible individuals - we don't want to see people get intoxicated and drink and drive.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna:

I have read your column and talked with you on the phone a few times and I appreciate what you have told me. So far, everything you said has happened.

My husband of 23 years is ill. He has cancer in his colon, and I want to know how his treatment will go. He is almost 60 years old, and he says that he is going to die. I don't like to hear him talk like that so I try and ignore it.

What do you see? Is he going to recover? What will I do if he doesn't get better?

Worried Sick

Dear Worried Sick:

This is a hard one. Your husband has a while yet on the earth...but...he is preparing himself and you for his leaving.

I can't make it any easier for you than your understanding allows it to be. He is telling you the truth and needs for you to acknowledge his understanding and prepare yourself and your family as much as possible for his death.

I understand that he is not afraid of his own death, but he is afraid of the suffering preceding that moment.

Please do yourself, your children, and him a favor by living in his life and not in his death. He is still here, so treat him everyday in a way that reflects life.

He loves you and you also love him. Acknowledge that with gentleness. The difference between you and other people right now is that you know he is leaving. This allows you some time to reconcile the love so that you will have no regrets when he does leave.

He still has several months without pain or hospitalization. His treatments are moderately successful and will hold the cancer at bay for quite a while. You have time to travel, visit with relatives and friends, and build memories.

Life is round. Like the sun, the moon, and the earth, life is round. We are born, we live, we die, and we return home to the spirit world and live within that wonderment until we are born again...

My blessings and prayers are with you, your husband, and your family. Remember please to live in the moment, in the living, and to address death when it comes as only a temporary separation.

Blessings from my heart.

Dear Anna:

My son is involved in a gang in Pine Ridge. I can't seem to get to him in a way that changes his friends or the way he is acting. There doesn't seem to be any help here until the kids get into serious trouble, and then there isn't so much help, there is only punishment.

What do you see for my son? He and his friends are pretty scary and none of the other parents seem to have any more influence than I do.

What is going to happen?

Worried Mom

Dear Worried Mom:

I talked yesterday with a client that used to teach school in Los Angeles. Most of her students were gang members and she told me that everyday one of them would come to school crying over the loss of a friend or relative from a drive-by or other gang-related violent death. She told me that when the children were asked about their future they would tell her they didn't have one; that they were going to die young in a violent way.

On the Pine Ridge, the gangs are emulating gang behavior and grouping together for power. The emotions and testosterone are racing through their blood streams without any direction for positive release.

They do not yet have the hardened hearts of their brothers and sisters in the big cities; yet it is only a matter of time before violent gang related deaths happen on the reservation.

That will be a time when the schools and the courts and the other program agencies along with the people and the council get together and make some hard fast rules: Curfew will be strictly enforced, gang related dress will not be allowed - even within the community.

Other stringent means will be called upon to try to snuff out the gang mentality.

Loss of identity and an enclosed environment of despair due to poverty and a sense of low self-esteem are part of the problem. Loss of identity coupled with a feeling of disempowerment contribute to the problems.

Drugs and alcohol enhance the volatile situation.

Remedies are not immediate. They take time. Personal empowerment and good self esteem come from a good spiritual understanding of who each physical human being is. Their relationship with the Creator and their response to remembering that they are spirits in human bodies helps to alleviate the feeling of despair or personal powerlessness.

Cultural revitalization enhances identity. Programs that address cultural understanding and create work-play environments of health and balance are part of the answer. Successful part-time employment resulting in some monetary gain are also important to give each child some sort of measurement of success and self-worth.

Some of these things are being done around the reservation, mostly spearheaded by medicine men and their circles. I don't know if I can do this in the newspaper, but I will anyway. I recommend that you corral your son and take him to Thunder Valley near Sharps Corner. In that circle (tiospaye), there is much going on to help the children find balance in their worlds.

If you cannot force him to go, then I recommend that you enroll him in a boarding school away from the reservation. Separation from his friends will help him learn to make better choices.

I don't think that every parent of a gang member can send their child away so the reservation needs to address the problem actively with education, social identification restructuring, spiritual strengthening, love and legal discouragement of gang activity.

Good luck. I see your son going to school in Chamberlain and I see a healing of his attitude.

Dear Anna:

How many kids as I going to have? Will I have simple pregnancies or will I have trouble giving birth?

Ready to be a parent

Dear Ready:

You must be haioca. You are a male - so your pregnancies should be relatively miraculous - but given your equipment they will probably be difficult.

You will have three children - and their mother will be the one in the labor room. She won't appreciate your sense of humor during her upcoming child birthing. I see you fainting in the labor room.

Good Luck Daddy.

BID

The Bureau of Indian Affairs, Fort Berthold Agency is planning to conduct an Oil and Gas Sale within the next two (2) months. We will be offering all unleased allotted mineral acreage to the highest bidder through a competitive sealed bid process. We have established the primary terms of the lease as follows:

Minimum bonus per acre $75.00

Minimum annual rental rate per acre $2.50

Minimum royalty rate per acre 18%

Primary term of the lease 5 years

The approval of a mineral lease on the Fort Berthold Reservation is based on majority consent, under special authority enacted in 1998 and 1999, and codified under 25 U.S.C. 396. Upon completion of the competitive bid sale, leases will become effective, once the required number of owners have consented to lease and approved by the BIA Superintendent.

This decision is based upon the fact that Fort Berthold Agency has received numberous requests from prospective lessees to lease certain allotted minerals. Several lessees have been acquiring signatures for negotiated oil and gas leases on the Fort Berthold Reservation. While this attempt has been made in good faith, we feel it would be in the best interests of the allotted mineral owners to include their lands in an advertised lease sale in order to receive the optimum bonus consideration through competitive bid. We recommend the allotted mineral owners who are in negotiations for an oil and gas lease to give full consideration to this alternate option.

Those allotted mineral owners who do not wish to have their lands advertised in this competitive bid lease sale, please contact the Fort Berthold Agency in writing within (2) weeks of the date of this notice.

Our mailing address is as follows: Superintendent, PO Box 370, New Town, ND 58763. Our telephone number is (701) 627-4707.

Earl Silk,

Wealth of Lakota language, songs and history donated to OLC

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

KYLE - The historical language and music of Lakota ancestors will now be readily accessible to students at Oglala Lakota College.

On Wednesday, Aug. 30, the family of the late James E. Emery donated to the college 300 compact discs of audio originally recorded on reel-to-reel tapes over 25 years, copies of the collection entrusted to Black Hills State University in 1984.

Students learning the languages will be able to listen to the language as it was spoken earlier in the 20th Century and will hear how it has changed. Hearing the words spoken by their relatives, making that personal connection with the past, will enhance students' learning, said Tom Shortbull, OLC president.

"Ours is an oral language and an oral tradition," Shortbull said. "If you don't use language conversationally, you lose it."

The discs were presented to Shortbull by Emery's relatives: his sons Jim and Chuck and grandsons Dave and Randy.

Born in 1904 on the Rosebud Reservation, Emery was "basically kidnapped" and placed in a boarding school, where he and other students would sneak away and speak the Lakota language that had become forbidden to them, Randy Emery said.

Later, when he left and then returned to the reservation, Emery noticed that the spoken language was changing and becoming more clipped.

"He didn't want it to vanish," Randy Emery said. "Grandpa realized that the very identity of the Lakota people revolves around the language, the music, and the history."

Spoken language changes over time, especially if spellings and pronunciations haven't been standardized with a dictionary and other writings. Shortbull said there have been some Lakota dictionaries compiled, most notably the Buechel dictionary of the 1950s, but slang and colloquialisms become accepted and normalized, and the Lakota spoken today has been altered from how it was spoken in the past.

The recorded words of ancestors will bring home to how much the language has changed and perhaps help to restore the integrity of the words, Shortbull said.

Emery captured conversations with noted Lakota leaders such as Ben Black Elk, Charlie Red Cloud, Frank Fools Crow, and Dewey Beard, survivor of Little Big Horn and Wounded Knee Massacre.

"There're some really priceless stories," Dave Emery said.

Gov. Rounds discusses statistics in education

Todd County lags behind other schools

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

MISSION - The theme for Governor Michael Round's education town meeting is "Putting Kids First in Education" and it was an appropriate title as the Governor was energetic and informative in discussing a large number of statistics relative to Todd County Schools and their comparison to statewide school averages.

Although there was not a great number of parents in attendance, there was school staff and tribal officials.

Rounds made it clear that his agenda was not to talk about consolidation as might occur in smaller school districts which are shrinking, but to talk about opportunities and to raise questions.

Rep. Jim Bradford and Rep. Larry Lucas were acknowledged by Rounds, as RST council representative, Robert Moore, from Antelope Community gave the invocation. Keith Moore, Director of the South Dakota Indian Education Office was present, as well as RST President, Rodney M. Bordeaux, RST council representatives, Mike Crow Eagle and Scott Herman and Cindy Young, RST Tribal Education Director.

Delivering a PowerPoint presentation that provided a wealth of information, Rounds noted that the number of young people in the state is going down, while those in the older brackets is slowly increasing. In 1969 the total number of students was 175,654 while in 2006 that figure decreased to 121,558 students for a 31 percent decrease.

Todd County has apparently stayed the same in student enrollment for the last six years, while most other school districts have fewer students. In 2001 it had 2,049 students, while in 2006 there were 2,043 students. In Bennett County Schools there were 607 students in 2001 and in 2006 there were 542 students for a 11 percent decrease. In the White River School District the numbers decreased from 413 to 383 students for the same period representing a 7 percent decrease.

Governor Michael Rounds gave a PowerPoint presentation at the Todd County Middle School on Wednesday in which he provided a wealth of comparative data as to how Todd County Schools measure up compared to state wide achievement averages.

In projecting the enrollment at TCSD until 2014 the enrollment should be approximately 678 students for the same period representing a 7 percent decrease.

In terms of the state budget, the Governor stated that 50 percent of the budget is earmarked for 'education' while 11 percent goes to the courts and corrections, 33 percent goes to taking care of people and 6 percent is for operating state government. In 2003 per pupil funding

Big Crow looks forward to her senior year, national tournament

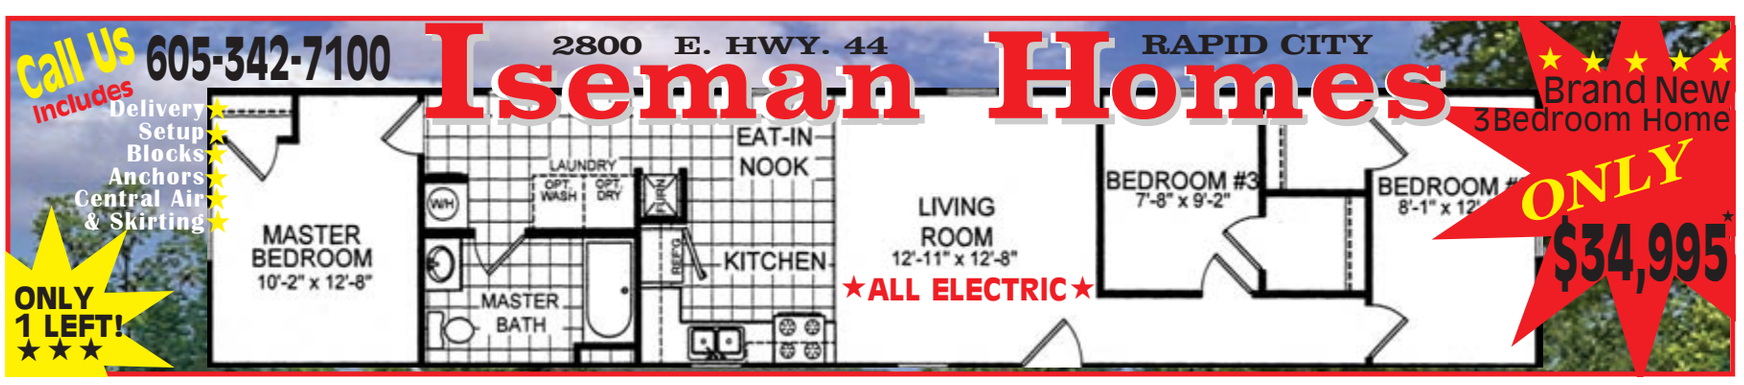
Pine Ridge graduate's strength, tenacity are MVP qualities

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

MAYVILLE, N.D. - "You cannot quit, you have to hang in there and finish no matter how hard it gets," said Pine Ridge graduate Laura Big Crow who is looking forward to her senior year at Mayville State University in North Dakota, "there were so many times during my first semester at Williston State that I thought about quitting and going back home, I was so homesick but I am so glad that I stuck it out, its been a great experience that's been very rewarding and life enriching."

After an outstanding four years at Pine Ridge High School which included helping to take the Lady Thorpes to the State A championship game in Aberdeen her senior year, Laura Big Crow graduated in the spring of 2004 and enrolled in Williston State College in northwestern North Dakota.

"Over the six years that I've been coaching, she is head and shoulders the most talented player I've had," said Hunter Berg who coached Laura Big Crow for two years at Williston State College, "now that she is gone, we realize how good she was and how she just dominated our conference."



Laura earned conference MVP honors and junior college all America recognition during her two years at Williston. She led her team in scoring and in rebounding.

"There hasn't been a player in our league who could score like Laura, she was so physically talented," added Berg.

Although she had a strong interest in physical therapy, Laura earned two associate degrees at Williston, one in liberal arts and one in science, she changed her major when she moved on to Mayville State and now is majoring in elementary education with minors in coaching and social sciences.

"Elementary education because I love kids, I love teaching kids and being around them, I don't think I'll go higher than second grade though," said Big Crow, "coaching because I don't want basketball to end now, I want to help other kids go out and play college ball."

and ceremonies of Plains Indians, recorded by people and groups such as Red Scaffold, Cherry Creek, Red Cloud, Little Eagle, Sons of the Oglalas, and Matt and Nellie Two Bulls.

The Flag Song "sung at every powwow … was written and sung for the first time in Grandpa's basement," Dave Emery said.

Emery's son, James W. (Jim) Emery of Custer, said copies of recordings will be made available in the future to other Native colleges and universities. He said he hopes that the recordings will be put to good use in language classes, starting a newer method of teaching Native language.

Four relatives of Jim E. Emery were present Aug. 30 when Oglala Lakota College accepted CDs of interviews, voices and songs. From left to right are Randy and Dave Emery, Emery's grandsons, and Chuck and Jim Emery, Emery's sons.

Emery was an educator, and after he retired from a career at Black Hills Power and Light in Rapid City, he taught Lakota language at Sinte Gleske College in Rosebud and at University of South Dakota in Vermillion.

"On the day he died, he was teaching language and culture" at USD, his son Jim said.

Emery also hosted two statewide radio shows, Moccasin Time and Oyate.

Emery traveled to reservations throughout South Dakota and various locations out of state, his son Chuck Emery said. Most of the recordings are in Lakota, but some are Dakota and other tribal languages.

Emery made his first recordings on wax cylinders, all of which were lost when they melted in storage at USD, Dave Emery said.

Shortbull said Emery's recordings will be available immediately to OLC students coming in for the fall semester.

Rounds meeting in Mission to school districts was $3,497 while in 2008 that figure will increase to $4,365.

Rounds then asked, "How can we continue to attract and retain the best teachers for our students?

There were 66 teaching positions not filled in music and special education with the highest shortages in rural areas."

Todd County SAT scores were then compared to average state scores and almost all grade levels assessed including grades 5, 8 and 11 were 20 to 30 points below the state averages. The same dismal statistics were characteristically the same when looking at reading scores as Todd County lagged behind average state reading scores by the same margin.

Todd County is in level 3 improvement status and Rounds noted that an audit had been completed for TCSD.

The school district has not made adequate yearly progress or AYP for the last four years and it has chosen to use a consultant to oversee their efforts to meet NCLB. He then illustrated the professional development resources that have been made available to the district.

Rounds then asked what could be done to assist Todd County as he opened up the floor for discussion and comment. SD Secretary of Education, Rick Melmer, said, "People are willing to work with us. The NCLB is kind of a controversial program. In Indian Country, it is the best thing that has been done…Todd County is one of two districts in district improvement status and that number is growing. You have a diverse population here, low income, special education needs, limited English proficiency and minority status. You have a tough job when it comes to NCLB."

Keith Moore spoke of the GEAR-UP program and noted, "Indian youth can fill jobs one day as their numbers go up. The Governor understands that." Moore also mentioned the successful funding of a grant program which will enable 20 Native American students with a bachelor's degree to earn their graduate degree. He said he would formally announce it at the South Dakota Summit on Indian Education in Rapid City in a couple of weeks.

Sherry Red Owl of Sinte Gleska University asked how the university could assist TCSD and not to forget about St. Francis Indian School as many students transfer back and forth between the two.

Rounds noted that tribal colleges can play a major role in preparing a work force, while Keith Moore said that a team from the state would be visiting several colleges soon to hold a listening session.

Red Owl noted that about one-third of their students were non-Indian and that something should be done to essentially subsidize their enrollment.

RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux said, "The Governor is working with us.

There is a need for economic development. We met with students at both SFIS and TCHS and they addressed the issue of alcohol in the community and making schools safe. We will continue to meet with students."

Finally, Oyate Guerue a student at SGU said, "We live here, our children live here. There is a big problem with SGU graduating students and Teach For America. The students are closer at SGU and are not going to leave. 10 of us are going to graduate and want jobs." While the Governor praised the Teach For America program which has placed 50 students on the Pine Ridge and Rosebud reservation, Corrine Sully said that Teach For America needs to have more cultural understanding of Lakota people.

Governor Rounds spoke a line that perhaps represented his sentiments in sponsoring the town hall meeting as he said, "I won't accept that any child born here is less capable of learning to read."

Big Crow

According to Laura, college is about self discipline, about knowing when things need to get done and doing it. You are a lot more on your own, there's lots and lots of papers to write, too many papers - in high school I didn't have that much homework but in college you go to class and take notes and its all homework, it comes down to being responsible, she added.

"When I first went to college, I learned that the pace of the game was a lot faster than high school and more physical and its basketball from August to April," said Big Crow, "this is my last year and I would really like to finish strong, it would be nice to go to the national tournament."

"When we signed up Laura last year, it was a big step for us, she is a huge piece of the puzzle, she is so strong for us and will be even stronger her senior year," said Dennis Hutter, Mayville State coach, "we will rely on her as a senior and for her leadership, for scoring and rebounding and our goal is to surround her with a good supporting cast. We have seven of our top ten players back, we have added a Division I transfer and a point guard from Minnesota so our goal is nationals and we need to keep Laura on the floor to get there, she is such a mismatch for anyone who has to guard her and when they double or triple team her, we will be ready and this year we are going to be more creative in getting the ball into Laura, there is a lot of excitement around our team this year."

Mayville State lost to South Dakota Tech in the conference tournament last year and both the coach and Laura look to Dakota State who is returning all of their players, to SD Tech and Jamestown as providing the competition and roadblocks to the national tournament.

"Last year I made it to 15 of her 30 games, we are all so proud of what she is doing, she is hanging in their and she makes all of us so proud," said Laura's father Jamie Big Crow, "in the beginning it was really hard for her to be away from home but her mom and I talked to her all the time about hanging in there."

"College is so much fun," said Big Crow, "I love having my own place and you meet so many people, I have a friend from Trinidad and one from Tobago, and I now have friends playing ball at University of North Dakota, at Missouri State and even in New York and to think I almost quit when I was a freshman, I just decided that I didn't like failing and I didn't like not finishing what I started."

Mayville State has a tough schedule this year, they open up with Brandon University on October 26 and play the University of Winnepeg the following night. On Nov. 24 they travel to Marshall, Min. to take on Northern State University and on Dec. 11 they are in Grand Forks for a game with University of North Dakota.

"When Laura decided to come to Mayville, I literally started dancing on my desk," she works her tail off, she stays out of trouble, she's a great role model and really if you haven't seen her play and you look at her, she doesn't always seem like a ball player but she surprises you, she just keeps coming back and she just keeps fighting, she's a gamer."

"Laura could have gone to a higher level, many saw her height at 5'10" or 11" and said she is too short to be a post player," said coach Berg, "but anyone who has seen her play knows different, she is so physical, she makes up for her lack of height in a lot of ways."

"Over the years I have had a number of role models, my brother Francis, Doni DeCory, her mom Tiny, my mom and dad and I've had good coaches, Dusty LeBeau, Hunter Berg and Dennis Hutter are alike in that they push, and push and push you to be the best that you can be, they know when to coach and when not to," said Big Crow; "this is my last year and it has gone by so quickly, I've been playing ball since I was five or six at Wolf Creek School and I want to make this last year really count, my goal is to go to the nationals."

RST Review Board is sworn in as interim SFIS school board

ST. FRANCIS - Last Tuesday, the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Tribal Education Review Board was sworn in at an official public board meeting held at the administration headquarters. The Review Board will serve on an interim basis and will relinquish control of the school board as soon as background investigations are complete on the newly elected SFIS school board members. Dr. Richard Bordeaux, who will serve as board president said that the interim board should be in office no more than a month and perhaps, preside over one additional meeting.

The interim school board will also undergo a background investigation.

The RST council originally passed a resolution installing the Review Board as the school board on an interim basis amid concerns raised by the RST Tribal Education committee. The tribal council made it clear that the role of the Review Board was to oversee new school board elections which occurred on August 23 and to make no personnel changes.

RST council action called for expanding the membership of the school board to five Sicangu Lakota community members selected from reservation wide polling with an additional two representatives originating from SFIS. Additionally, membership on the board requires one to be enrolled in the Rosebud Sioux tribe and which fits the federal definition of Indian self-determination. The five tribal members chosen on August 23 include, Rose Cordier, Hattie Dunham, John Spotted Tail, Byron Wright and Clifford Marshall. Wright and Marshall are incumbents having served in a previous board capacity.

The special meeting on Tuesday was considered an organizational meeting as board officers were chosen, a motion to hire personnel was passed and community member, Ned Metcalf, was given to the floor to air a number of concerns he had about the operation of SFIS.

A legal document in which SFIS had appealed an RST tribal court ruling was provided to the interim school board by way of the RST tribal education department. Superintendent Larry Parker said that the school's legal counsel had been asked to issue a "cease and desist" order to the court which would effectively stop the action which some RST council representatives believed was still in effect. As a chartered entity there was also concern that the legal costs for SFIS to challenge the governing authority of RST was a waste of money and could be channeled for direct academic services for students.

Sioux San Hospital expansion plan could take years

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ The Indian Health Service wants to triple the size of the Sioux San Indian Hospital at Rapid City, but it could be years before the work starts.

It would mean $51 million in new construction, more than doubling staff to about 300, and adding $41.5 million to its annual budget.

At a community meeting Wednesday night, officials said that best-case funding would mean construction in 2012.

IHS associate area director Jon Fogarty said that at the current level of funding for new construction, it would taking nearly 20 years to build a new Sioux San.

Still, Fogarty also said community support for the plan could speed funding.

``You get the public involved like they did at Ellsworth Air Force Base, and this will happen very quickly,'' he said, referring to a successful effort to remove Ellsworth from a military base closure list two years ago.

Fogarty said an expanded Sioux San could have the economic impact of about a quarter the size of the air base, which is one of the region's biggest employers.

There were some opponents to the IHS plan, in part because it would eliminate the few inpatient beds left at Sioux San.

Patient numbers do not justify inpatient services, IHS program analyst Sandy Coulter said, especially with Rapid City Regional Hospital so close. Rather, the IHS proposal would offer expanded hours for clinics, including an urgent-care clinic that would be open nights and weekends.

The IHS plan would add new services such as audiology, physical therapy, podiatry, a nutrition program, and an addiction outpatient program.

The dental clinic would have 24 chairs for adults and 12 for children, and a primary care clinic with nearly 50 exam rooms and offices.

New equipment in the plan would cost $12.5 million.

The expansion plan for Sioux San - 15 years in the making - has been approved in a ``program justification document'' and is fifth in line behind three new projects in Arizona and a clinic in Eagle Butte, Fogarty said.

Fogarty said since the start of the Iraq war, congressional funding to IHS for new construction has decreased from $80 million to $90 million each year to an average of $20 million the past three years.

White River group plans food pantry

WHITE RIVER - White River's residents are reaching out to their fellow citizens with the establishment of a food pantry. Boasting a population of approximately 600 and a median household income of $27,900 as compared to an overall median income of $40,310 for South Dakota, White River fits the profile of the Horizons Project which is designed to serve low-income, rural communities.

A series of community meetings that began with Talking Circles followed by leadership training residents have undertaken activities that address a very real need in their community. The development of a community action plan has resulted in a goal of getting a food pantry established. Thus far, a house has been donated from the Catholic Church which will be moved and renovated with community members' labor.

"Horizon allows us to dream, to create, to hope, to wonder, "what if we..., and best of all: to actually do something-as creating the food pantry demonstrates." said Mayda Bartlett. Wilma Janis added, "Horizons brought a wonderful diversity of community members together, even the teenagers participated." Avery Thompson, Horizon field staff indicated that the community is excited about this project and have a strong commitment to its success. He said, "this is only the beginning of what this community will do." In addition to the food pantry, future plans for the community include a horse project, a trail for kids for walking to town, a skate park, and an organized sports program such as baseball and/or soccer.

Guest Column

A tribute to my dad Joe Fast Horse Sr.

Cecelia Spotted Bear
Wounded Knee, S.D.

I honor my dad who died on Thanksgiving day in 1979. He had no education so he could not read or write but he had a lot of common sense, because he raised three boys and five girls on what he earned. He worked very hard and when we were able to work we each had a job to do.

Before the BIA stopped all the farmers and ranchers of our people we lived good. But the BIA said the Indians had to sell their livestock and make way for civilization, so our way was stopped. We became seasonal workers, we worked for the white farmers and ranchers t o make a living for ourselves.

When fall came, we picked potatoes, the farmers let us pick some for ourselves, so we would bring about 10 hundred pound sacks of potatoes to store in our cellars for winter use.

My parents bought the food, like beans, macaroni, sugar, salt, coffee, tea in bulk.

I remember the cheese they bought came in a big round wooden container. We ate a lot of rabbit, deer and sometimes beef for the winter months, one time we even ate horse meat. Many of the families went out and worked in fields for the summer months.

When we camped at the camp grounds, we went to work and the farmers would come in the mornings to hire the workers. Sometimes they took us to their place and let us camp on their property.

All us children worked in the fields and dad took care of the money so we each were able to buy what we needed, not what we wanted. We were always late to the boarding schools in the fall because the potato picking harvest was not over by September.

Dad believed in hard work, getting up when the sun came up and going to bed early.

In my teen years when my friends came after me and we went riding around and did not make it home until late, I still had to get up the same as the others. Dad said if I could stay up all hours of the night I could get up in the mornings too. Sometimes when we stayed in one of the border towns, I worked for the motels and hotels or restaurants and even did baby sitting.

Dad would work for the city when they were making the water lines or sidewalks. We lived in tents all summer. My dad used tough love on me many times while I was growing up and wanting to have my own way. He spanked me to teach me responsibility. If he lived now and did that he would probably be in jail for child abuse.

My dad would sit with us in the evenings and talk with us about many things, we lived in a one room house with no table because our house was too small. But, we had a battery radio and listened to the Grand Ole Opry or some other program of stories. My dad loved music and liked to sing.

He even trained one of his saddle horses by band music which he rode in the parades, as soon as the band music would start that horse would perk up his ears, lift up his tail and start dancing to the beat.

My dad loved the animals we had and gave them all names, he even had a badger that would allow only my dad and my sister Arlene to feed him.

Fathers need to give their child something to remember them by, my dad was my hero, he was the strongest and wisest man I ever knew.

When I became a Christian he said, "daughter you have chosen a hard life for yourself but, it is the best life and the best way to live." Now when I go through hard battles by family members, I remember dad telling me that, so I go to my heavenly Father and tell him all about the problems and he takes them and gives me comfort and strength to go through the hard time.

God never promised us an easy life but he said he would be with us when we go through the fire and the floods.

I appreciate each dad who is really trying to raise their children to be law abiding responsible people.

God gave you the responsibility to be the leaders of your home, so lead your family in the right way to be honest and truthful and to work hard.

Remember no one owes us a living, we owe it to ourselves to make a living. My dad use to tell me this.

An ancient true story 'Wanagi Yukanpi'

Editor's NoteBelow is the English translation from last week's issue Lakota story.

This true story took place when the old ones were still alive. They tell of a visit from a Skeleton Ghost. A war party had been on a march toward enemy territory when it got dark on them on the plains. They were able to find a patch of sticks needed for a wikiup shelter. After extracting the wikiup they settled down for the evening. As it was getting dark they heard a man singing. The sound of the singing was coming closer. As they listened they could figure out the words of the song.

It went something like this- "When the men were chasing Buffalo. I thought I was the greatest. That's who I am."

And he started to cry. By this time the zuya wicasa (warriors) knew it was a wanagi (Ghost).

The supposedly brave men were frightened and scrambling to be on the bottom as they piled on top of each other. This was when the bravest of the brave begin to take control of a bad situation. The wanagi came to the entrance way and said I am hungry so I came. The brave leader said "Hau, come on in." The skeleton came in and sat down with his bones rattling. He gave him some wasnan (pemmican) so as he was eating it fell through his ribs and onto the ground. There was a fire burning in the center of their wikiup. He pulled a walega wognanke (thin piece of fat that covers a Buffalo's stomach) and put two sticks on it so it could cook evenly over the fire.

All of a sudden the brave man threw the thin piece of fat on the skeleton. He screamed and tried to make a fast getaway.

The Blotahunka grabbed his nightstick and chased the ghost. He beat the skeleton all to pieces and said "That's all there is to it." He taunted his companions a bit and they went to sleep. The next morning they all got up and checked on the wanagi. The bones were scattered over a wide area. The leader of the group once again proved himself to be the true Blotahunka. He was the equivalent of probably Audis Murphy or John Wayne. This true story says something about the fact that Ghost are real and hungry at times.

The façade of religious zeal

Wanblii Ake Glii

I was at a wiwanyang wacipi earlier this summer and it was between one of the later rounds of the third day that the eyapaha asked the people if an elder could speak of the importance of the ceremony taking place. It took awhile but a man eventually came up, and to put it briefly, it was the first time I had ever heard an elder speak so inspiringly about the history and reality that has constantly faced our people. There were two things he said that I'll never forget. "When they came with the Bible we had our land," he said. "Now we have the Bible and they have our land," a proverb I've heard from time to time about the wasicu people, which I have found to hold more and more truth as the years go by. And finally, he reminded us, "the Catholic Church owns the most land on our reservation."

Remember relatives the church will tell you everything you want to hear and profess that their only desire is to help. That probably is true for the most part, but their idea of help is more along the line of the complete conversion of the Oyate! This would probably mean two things for us then; the last submission of us as a once spiritually independent nation; and the final robbing of what little land we have left, which brings me to ask the question: Why do you think the Catholic church owns the most land on our reservation?

Could it be that they wanted to teach or should I say force the people and our youth into their religious ways? It's possible. Well okay then, if they want to share "religious education" why not ask them to start by telling the truth about the entire wicked and ignorant history of the Catholic church? Ask them to talk about the beginnings of Christianity's 2000+ years of murder, intolerance, hate and racism. Tell them to educate everyone about how this mentality came to dominate all of Europe before their "discovery" of the new world; how their mode of thought at that time came to be, and how/why it was rationalized in their thinking to feel it was their god given right to exterminate the Indigenous people of the Americas. And if they were ever to implement a program like this I guarantee you will see the membership of the Church drop, Lakota tradition increase and our peoples "statistics of poverty" improve.

But that is the last thing they want to do and you want to know why? I will tell you in bit, but first when I say "they" I mean the religious organizations and the government, which are virtually one, and I mean most of white America too because the religious slogans "God bless America" and "In God We Trust," are not on American currency for nothing. Now the reason why this open confession will not likely happen is because if it were to, it would cause a shock wave that would be heard around the world. Every religion that was ever spawned from its Christian and Protestant mommy and daddy would have to confront the long ignored and even denied fact that their forefathers are responsible for the genocide of some 150 million of our ancestors and relatives in all of North and South America combined! And "they" the descendants would have to globally face that fact of stolen lands; the attempted cultural annihilation of all Indigenous peoples and the continuing oppression, suppression and repression of the Oyate and our Indigenous relatives. Not to mention they would be subtly

The story behind my 'silver' hair

Dana Badmilk

I have been getting the comment more and more from people, "Wow, look at all your grey hairs!"

Or the hint to dye it "Hair dye is on sale" from people who pretend I have more grey hair than them, but they dye their hair. "Well, being older than you it makes me feel good to see you with grey hair."

Don't worry I cuss you all out in my head silently.

Can I just say right now, my hair is not grey. It is silver.

And I look at it as wisdom. I will perceive it as I want and not how you want. After all, isn't it how we feel about ourselves that matters.

Anyway, so I have this streak I have been talking about for over a year. Saying it will soon look like a chic from X-men. It's getting bigger, or more and more. It started with one when I was 18, which my mom ALWAYS pulled out. Then 2 by the time I was 23.

Then when I was 28 I thought it was about 6 but the lady that cut my hair told me I had a bunch. I left for Minnesota about a month after that so that night in the motel room I sat and looked through my whole head and pulled out about 16.

Now I can't fight it, or I will surely be bald.

But I don't mind it. I mean they ARE silver and not grey.

I am sure each one accounts for something in my life.

The Yankees losing in the post season last year had to be worth about 3 or 4 of them.

Waiting to see how I would be received as a columnist accounted for many.

Waiting in line at the grocery store and hoping I didn't go over my budget.

When I hit max bet at the casino on the penny machine.

When I was sitting at the IHS waiting room and trying not to be mad at waiting and at the IHS.

When I found out I was getting laid off, from the tribe…AGAIN!

The one time my kids were out late and I worried about them.

Worrying about my kids in general.

I am sure that each and every one of my SILVER hairs has a story and a meaning. I am sure I will be fine as they multiply in vast haste.

I am sure it will look okay.

If not, I am dying my hair L'Oreal Feria number 6.66 Double Intensity Auburn Red… and trying my luck at bingo!

Different strokes for different folks!

By Dr. Jim Wilson

I have recently had several people come to visit me and talk about what I have been writing about, ask questions and make some very good suggestions. Although I generally think of myself as self-directed and self-judging, I still got a degree of pleasure from those visits. In retrospect I am reminded that the most important of all human needs is recognition.

Recognition is acknowledgement that a person exists. Without recognition you are nobody; you do not exist! We will do anything for some form of recognition, especially if the recognition corresponds to the way we want to be acknowledged. And, too often, the only recognition we can get is for negative behavior.

When a child is born s/he knows nothing and can do nothing purposefully. IT is a blank slate (tabla rosa), IT cannot walk or talk and does not know if IT is Chinese, French or maybe Sioux Indian. IT is a product of nature. To get a useful product we must nurture what nature gave us.

Immediately the process of teaching begins. The caretaker (Mother?) begins to nurture the child along the long road to independence and self support. We teach them to walk, talk, and take care of themselves and develop the self-esteem necessary to believe in themselves rather than remain dependent and looking to us (or others) for support and acknowledgement as good, productive, self-supporting people. They must learn to recognize their own capabilities. Thus, we are justified in saying that all behavior (good and bad) is learned.

We must understand that no two people can or will be exactly the same; therefore, every one of us reacts to circumstances differently and therefore we can say truthfully, "different strokes for different folks."

Recognizing the necessity of different strokes for different folks is a great accomplishment on our part because that means we have learned every individual is different and is entitled to be treated differently, which in turn means we should really see the individual not only as an individual, but more importantly, as a collection of senses, traits, skills, and other complicated combinations of body and mind offerings and needs.

One persistent topic is the issue of prolonged dependency. We frequently think in terms of the ongoing questioning of American Indian Tribes being dependent on the US Government. For many years I have been pushing the reading and understanding of the 1868 Fort Laramie Treaty between the Sioux (and other tribes) and the US Government.

It is of the utmost importance that all people understand that the goods and services provided by Uncle Sam were bought and paid for in that treaty. For the many Americans who ask us why we do not rise up and throw off the yokes of Uncle Sam, we must tell them that we know the alternative would be worse: the ravenous hunger and greed of the state governments!

The relationship of American Indian Tribes to our federal government is built on hundreds of years of interactions and codified laws. The feds 'recognize' the tribes and attempt to deal with them (us) like we hope to deal with individuals in our modern society. Yes, we have a parent-child relationship, but we also know that no matter what age the child might be, s/he is still capable of being a grown and independent son or daughter and remain a member of the family. A great many individual American Indians are good, productive, self-supporting people but do not want to 'terminate' their relationship with Uncle Sam..

Another persistent question I (we) hear is, "when are you Indians going to join (and enjoy) the American mainstream?" This gives me the great opportunity to 'recognize' the questioner and all of my options. After many years of hearing this Q and thinking about it, I have learned that I don't have to choose; I can comfortably and enjoyably live as an American Indian and an American citizen, so there!

Coming to a personal awareness that we can grow and develop into good, productive, self-supporting individuals and still be comfortable members of a family is the greatest security a human being can have. A warm, protective family which gives us recognition as good, productive, self-supporting individuals is almost as secure as the womb we did not want to leave! The Tiospiye serves a great purpose, but its effectiveness demands that we give more than we want to give and take less than we think we need.

Since millions of our citizens are going back to school about now it is appropriate to give a few positive strokes to the many who are part of the process, and that means almost everybody because formal education is a responsibility of all of society. However, it is the student (of whatever age) who must get the first positive strokes for they are the people we ask to delay their rewards until a later date. We ask them to understand that their efforts will be rewarded 'later.'

To help them accept this situation we must do our parts as parents, educators and other community members by doing everything we can to provide them the best platform from which to operate as learners. Tired and/or hungry students do not perform well. Insecure, frightened or depressed students do not perform well. And, we know that every individual must have some form of ongoing recognition. The individual gets that in many different ways, so we must realize that and offer many opportunities for the student to get their fair share of recognition. The prime means by which younger people get recognition is acceptance from their peers.. Team sports, hobbies and other school activities can provide such opportunities. Reading, writing and 'rithmetic is only a part of becoming educated.

Just as individuals must advance progressively through a sequence of socio-psychological development from the family, to the school, to the community they must grow into their citizenship roles and participate in community activities like scouting, independent sports, and clubs. We use organized activities to teach and reinforce knowledge and skills which become permanent parts of each individual's response to their needs as productive members of the community.

The 'working stiffs' of society (who, me?) deserve positive strokes for their consistency, reliability and often unrecognized role as models for the young members of their families and communities. And, of course, I will recognize you for having recognized me. One of the great memories I have is hearing my mother speak of my humble high school football career some forty years after the fact by saying, "he was a pretty good player. He wore uniform number 77." docjims@aol.com admitting to the world they are doing it all over again in the Middle East.

That is a pretty heavy burden to be riding on the back of the once frequently labeled "most admired country in the history of the world". So, you can count on this confession not happening anytime soon. It is we, the Indigenous people, who will have to bring this about. It is our tribal council's duty to make this happen, but they probably won't, so it will be up to the mentally and revolutionary free minded to make it so.

Some of you may be sincere and devout followers of a European based religion and could be wondering, "what wicked and ignorant history?" Or, "why do we have to bring that up? It's been forgiven and forgotten." Well, the answer is once again really simple. We will only be able to bring about true healing when we know and come to understand what exactly caused this sickness for our people in the first place. That means learning and talking about when it all started thousands of years ago for the wasicu to the present problems we face now as Lakota. And in the current colonized minds of most (but not all) our people, namely our governmentally obedient tribal leaders and our passive tribal members, this is a scary thing for them to think about. No doubt the good citizens of the United States and the government would label us as "militant" and probably even (god forbid) "terrorists." But how else will we ever see through this façade of religious zeal? By continuing on this road of insanity of doing the same things over and over and expect different results? Hmmm, I hope not.

Notes From Indian Country

What is the truth about the murder of Anna Mae?

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Anna Mae Pictou Aquash, a Mi'kmaq Indian from Canada, was brutally murdered in 1975. Her murder can only be described as a conspiracy and a cover-up by the American Indian Movement.

One man, Arlo Looking Cloud, an Oglala Lakota, and a member of AIM, is serving life in prison for her murder while his accomplice, the man he accused of pulling the trigger, John "Boy" Graham, a native of the Yukon in Canada, is awaiting extradition to the United States to stand trial.

Looking Cloud and Graham, in the parlance of the Mafia, were foot soldiers. They did not make the decisions of life and death but they were merely the tools that carried out the orders of their superiors. After 32 years have passed, who gave the order to kill Ms. Aquash? Who are these conspirators? What did they know and when did they know it?

Anna Mae was murdered on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. Her body was discovered on February 24, 1976. The higher ups in AIM immediately placed the blame on the Federal Bureau of Investigation and then set their propaganda machine in motion to shift the focus of the investigation away from themselves. AIM spokesman, John Trudell, said, "My overall view of this thing, I think that agents in the government were behind it. I mean this very seriously, that the government is the main force behind the killing of Annie Mae and the direct link representing the government would be the agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation."

The mainstream media made heroes of the occupiers of Wounded Knee. They became legends in their own minds. Even today there is still talk among the Lakota people of Pine Ridge that some terrible things took place within the AIM camp at Wounded Knee. There is a strong suspicion among some Pine Ridge residents that there are other bodies buried in secret graves at Wounded Knee including the body of an African American man named Perry Ray Robinson who apparently entered the camp at Wounded Knee in 1973 and has not be seen or heard from since.

The FBI does not come away with totally clean hands in its dealings with Native Americans. Too often its agents entered Indian reservations with little or no knowledge of the Native culture, traditions or customs and oftentimes increased tensions between differing factions unnecessarily, if not deliberately.

A power struggle between the Bellecourt brothers, Vernon and Clyde, and AIM leaders Russell Means and Dennis Banks, was boiling over within AIM. Some of the leadership suspected Aquash of being an FBI informant. She was held captive by members of AIM in the Denver home of Troy Lynn Yellowwood for a short time and then in February of 1975 she was tied up, placed in the trunk of a car owned by Theda Clark and transported to the reservation where, it is alleged, several members of AIM, including their attorney Bruce Ellison and a former correspondent for the Rapid City Journal, Candy Hamilton, observed her as a captive at the home of Bill Means shortly before she was taken to a lonely rode near the village of Wanblee and executed. Looking Cloud, Graham and Theda Clark were with her when she died. Clark is now in a nursing home suffering from Alzheimer's disease.

At an AIM conference held in Farmington, N.M. in 1975, Leonard Peltier was assigned the task of confronting Aquash and accusing her of being an FBI informant, according to an interview by Peter Matthiessen. Peltier was later convicted of the murder of FBI Special Agents Jack Coler and Ron Williams near Oglala.

He has maintained his innocence, but in her testimony at the Looking Cloud trial Ka-Mook Banks, the wife of Dennis Banks, and an AIM insider, said she was present when Peltier acknowledged killing the FBI agents by pointing his finger like a gun. She testified that Peltier said, "The 'MF' was begging for his life, but I shot him anyway." The agents were murdered execution style with coup de grace bullets to the head, as they lay wounded near their vehicle. Peltier is now serving two life sentences for the murders.

For every violent death on the Pine Ridge Reservation in the 1970s, AIM has pointed the finger of blame at the FBI, and at the duly elected tribal government of Dick Wilson. Over the years Wilson was mercilessly castigated and vilified by AIM and the mainstream media, and the government of the Oglala Sioux Tribe was labeled as "goons."

Too many movies and too many books have glorified AIM and told only one side of the story. It would be a terrible miscarriage of justice if only the foot soldiers are prosecuted and not those that gave the order to murder Anna Mae or those that knew about it and failed to prevent it or to report it.

Stepping in on the education of students

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

It took repeated attempts by several Sicangu tribal members and even my brother, Robin, to try to talk me into running for the school board here.

It didn't really sink in until this past week when I realized the importance of protecting the academic interests of a student body which is predominantly Lakota children.

I realize that I am not getting any younger, but I need to step up during the next school board election and see if I am electable.

Anymore, we hear of horror stories where veterans have to wait for years to qualify for disability benefits and that is disheartening. There are rumors that it is easy to qualify for VA benefits if one can claim exposure to Agent Orange, while others say that it isn't so. Under the social security guidelines as long as one can work, they do not qualify for benefits so what's a guy to do.

Life gets harder each year as tribal societies are bombarded each day from a dismal employment picture to racial politics to health issues to name but a few; no wonder our children are struggling too, to make sense of the world in which we reside.

The No Child Left Behind legislation has not made it any easier for our reservation schools to come into full compliance and that too, is discouraging.

The federal government is spending millions of dollars locally and the key to finding a solution to NCLB continues to elude us. I suspect that if we want to recruit and attract better teachers, we need to increase base salaries and remove South Dakota as one of the lowest in the nation. We greatly need more Lakota teachers and I hope they arrive soon. The teaching profession needs to be regarded as just that, a profession, and teachers need to be respected for the wonderful work they do with our children.

Another solution to making change is making wholesale changes where we completely remove an administrative team and hire another.

That is fairly drastic, but it is another suggestion that takes a bit of soul searching in order to enact.

Some reservation schools have made such wholesale changes and though it does not make for good politics, it may be a solution of last resort that will help a school district.

So, it finally sank in and to those who encouraged me in the past to run for the school board, I can honestly say I am listening. We need to expose our Lakota children to those initiatives, opportunities, and information that is good for them and only the Sicangu Lakota can control that in a school district that is overwhelmingly Lakota.

Dr. Archie Beauvais, (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and currently works as the director of the Lakota language preservation project for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

Little Wound blanks St. Francis, Red Cloud falls to Bennett County

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

KYLE/MARTIN/PINE RIDGE - Brice Hornbeck, Little Wound senior wide receiver, was efficient in his actions Friday, he caught one five yard pass from Trin In The Woods for a touchdown and his only run from scrimmage was a 70 yard end around for a touchdown to help lead the Mustangs to a 35-0 win over St. Francis.

"We have a young team with a young quarterback," said Darrel Hunter in his third year as Little Wound football coach, "we have a lot of freshman and sophomores in our lineup with only four or five seniors to provide that important leadership - we miss Johnny Cloud who could really air it out but Trin In The Woods had a good start in his first game at quarterback, he just needs to get some experience under his belt."

Kevin Hunter opened the scoring for the Mustangs with a 23 yard touchdown run midway through the first quarter, JC Mesteth kicked the extra point for A 7-0 Little Wound lead. Three minutes later, Michael Pretty Voice Crane blocked a Warrior punt and Mesteth picked the ball up on the two yard line and waltzed over the goal line to give the Mustangs a 13-0 lead after the kick failed. Midway through the second quarter, In The Woods hit Mesteth on a 20 yard TD pass to up the lead to 19-0; Mesteth fumbled on the two point attempt but an opportunistic Arlin Cuny scooped up the ball and lumbered over the line for a two point conversion and a Mustang 21-0 lead.

Hornbeck hustled up the field and caught St. Francis napping when he covered the kickoff in an unintended on-side kick. In the Woods hit his second TD pass, a five yarder to Hornbeck to give Little Wound a 27-0 halftime lead. Hornbeck wrapped up Little Wound's scoring in the third quarter as he took the ball on an end around and went 70 yards for a touchdown. In the Woods fumbled the snap on a two point conversion attempt and calmly reached down, picked it up and scooted straight ahead for the two points and a 35-0 lead.

"We have 32 players out right now for football, we could use some more lineman," said Hunter, "but mostly we need experience and by playoff time, we should be ready to compete, we'll learn to take care of the ball better and take advantage of opportunities that the other team's defense gives us, we'll be there in the end."

Red Cloud's Billy Scott, a senior running back, picked up where he left off last year as he carried the ball 26 times for 153 yards Friday night in Martin against Bennett County; it wasn't enough though as the Warriors broke open a close game in the third quarter to take out Red Cloud 19-6 for their second straight win of the 2007 season.

"We just made too many mistakes, we had nine penalties in the first half for 63 yards and we didn't take care of the ball," said first year Red Cloud head coach, Keith Ferguson, "it was the first game for us with some young players and we had mental mistakes on the field and off, we did not do a good job substituting and keeping 11 players on the field."

Turnovers by both teams told the story in the first half as Red Cloud's Lester Gotheridge recovered a fumble at the eight minute mark of the first quarter, Bennett County blocked a Red Cloud punt, Andrew Twiss recovered a Bennett County fumble and Clint Sasse intercepted Jeremy Blacksmith's pass. Ryan Mclaughlin stopped a Bennett County drive by recovering a fumble in the end zone for a touchback but Blacksmith threw a pass to DJ Toczek who took the interception back 19 yards for a Bennett County score and a 6-0 lead after the kick failed.

In the second half, Red Cloud ended up with 10 men on the field and Toczek rumbled 67 yards deep in Red Cloud territory, Austin Haynes threw a four yard TD pass to Chase Kieffe to bump the led to 12-0. Turnovers struck again as a Red Cloud lateral went off the mark and was recovered by Bennett County inside the five yard line. Haynes scored a touchdown on a two yard quarterback keeper, John Slattery kicked the extra point for a Bennett County 19-0 lead.

After an exchange of possessions, Red Cloud's Art Vitalis recovered a fumble and caught a nine yard TD pass from Blacksmith to put Red Cloud on the board.

"We were able to move the bll on offense And our defense held up overall, we just need to limit the mistakes aNd mental lapses." Said Fergvuson, "we want to keep aZ balanced offense with both the run and the pass.

Red Cloud hosts Pine Ridge Friday while Bennett County hosts St. Francis and Little Wound hosts Cheyenne Eagle Butte.

Kevin Hunter (2) gets out in front to provide the blocking for Brennon Montgomery (20), later Hunter would score Little Wound's first touchdown on a 23 yard run.

Todd County opens with big win in Pine Ridge

PINE RIDGE - "We wanted to get off to a fast start," said Bob Korneley, starting his eighth year as Todd County head coach, "we were able to score the first three times we had the ball Friday night in Pine Ridge."

Todd County used those quick scores to set the tone for a 34-0 win over the Thorpes Friday night. CJ Spotted Tail, a sophomore quarterback who started last year as a freshman, hit Mike Neiss on a 31 yard scoring drive to open the game. Spotted Tail came right back with a 30 yard strike to Jared Allen and followed it up with a five yard TD pass to Noah Kalonzo for a quick 21-0 led.

Canku One Star scored on a one yard plunge with Gunner Krogman's fourth extra point kick to make it 28-0 early in the second period. Krogman, one of the top runners in the state last year, carried the ball eight times for 100 yards including an 11 yard run for a TD in the second period for a 34-0 lead.

"Our defense held them to minus one yards rushing and an average of 34 yards per play," said Korneley, "we have a junior and senior dominated lineup and Pine Ridge is young, especially at the skill positions; I liked our balance passing and running, we need that during the season."

Spotted Tail finished with four out of five completions for three touchdowns and no interceptions; Todd County ran the ball 31 times for 216 yards while Aaron Stoddard carried it five times for 50 yards, Mike Neiss three times for 23 yards and Kalonzo twice for 32 yards.

The Falcon JV were able to play a good portion of the second half. Todd County hosts Crow Creek on Friday and the Thorpes travel to Red Cloud.

Rapid City School new director promotes parent involvement

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Students don't realize that choices they make now can affect the rest of their lives, said Delores Riley, Rapid City School District's new director of Indian Education and Grants.

"When I was 17, I didn't realize decisions I made then set me on a path for the rest of my life."

In conversations with tribal leaders, Riley has concluded that adults need to talk more to young people about their futures so they don't drop out of school hoping to get a job and make money.

"They need to look beyond that first paycheck," she said. "Life isn't just tomorrow."

Riley started her new job Aug. 6, a day that was "a little chaotic," she said. Riley spent her first days gathering what she needs to read, meeting the people she needs to know, and handling the logistics of filling a position that has become vital in a school district with a high American Indian student population.

And the district is happy to have her on board.

Delores Riley, Director of Indian Education prepares for new year.

Dr. Peter Wharton, superintendent of Rapid City school district, said Riley's wide range of education, experience, and training qualify her for the leadership role. "We look forward to great things happening," he said.

"I'm most impressed with her resolve, her passion for the job, and the enthusiasm she brings to it," Wharton said.

Combining the Indian Education program with grants management came about as a result of a district audit done by Technology and Innovations in Education, a nonprofit agency funded with federal money through the South Dakota Department of Education.

The desired result will be an integrated approach to student assistance, Wharton said. Riley will work with the executive team to design programs to help all students, including Native students, and "all kids will benefit," he said.

Riley has ideas for addressing issues such as the high dropout rate among Native and other students, and enlisting the help of school leaders and parents, as well as students themselves, to ask them, "What would help you stay in school? What is it we're not doing?"

Riley wants students to graduate, but she also wants them to look beyond that graduation date and see it as just a step to a lifetime of learning. "We're lifelong

Violence against women prompts suicides

By Carson Walker
The Associated Press

MISSION -- A suicide epidemic on Rosebud Reservation largely stems from broken relationships and violence against women, according to two victims and the head of a women's shelter who's helping them.

"There were days I just wanted to lay down and die," said one 18-year-old victim who was raped three years ago by a young man sent to prison for it.

"I never thought I would honestly live this long because I wanted so badly to die. I always thought of killing myself but whenever I actually got down to trying to do it, I didn't want to do it because I would leave my dad behind and I'm too close to my father."

The Associated Press has a policy of not naming victims of sexual assault.

Earlier this year, the tribal council declared a state of emergency because of the high rate of suicides on the Rosebud reservation, most of them committed by young people.

The young woman said the support and advocacy she received at the White Buffalo Calf Woman Society shelter in Mission helped her realize the attack didn't have to sentence her to a lifetime of seclusion, though now she picks her friends more carefully

Some of them also have been raped and contemplated suicide, she said.

Another woman who is in her 40s and married to a Rosebud tribal member said she went to the shelter last fall to escape a husband who physically and verbally abused her in front of their three children.

She said she left him only after seeing how the abuse prompted her oldest daughter to attempt suicide.

"I didn't hear the cries. I didn't hear the complaints, the nagging and what was going on. And so I more or less turned my back until it was too late," the woman said.

Tribal respect for women and children was much stronger before the European colonization of America, said Tillie Black Bear, director of the shelter that opened in 1977 and can house up to 45 women and children.

"Consequences were quick

Horizon group coming together for the community of Kyle

KYLE - The community of Kyle is coming together for the benefit of the community, due to the efforts of Horizons which is a program designed to serve low-income, rural communities. Steve Hernandez, of Oglala Lakota College and works with the group, said there are a number of community groups and individuals who are interested in improving the community and Horizons has brought them all together. "These various groups and individuals are all doing different things and Horizons is working to bring everyone together to coordinate their efforts," he said.

A series of community meetings initiated by Horizons began with Talking Circles followed by leadership training through Leadership Plenty. Through these discussions and training, residents developed a community action plan focused on community enhancement efforts including adding benches to the sidewalk built five years ago by the community, landscaping, planting trees and putting up signs. Connie Whirlwind Horse, Medicine Root District chairperson, said that she has already purchased the paint to cover the graffiti on the houses in the community.

Daphne Richards-Cook, the Horizons field staff member, expressed great excitement about all the different groups coming together to leveraging resources so that by having several organizations pooling funding much more will get done for the benefit of the whole community. She said, "Horizons offers a way to empower our own people by providing tools and forums to began talking to each other and reconnect with each other."

Kyle has a population of 970 and thus fits well with the intent of the Horizons program.

Horizons offers a comprehensive community leadership and capacity building process to benefit small, rural communities that have seen significant decline in population, income and resources. It draws people together with programs and activities to forge the dynamic leadership they need to take on difficult challenges like economic decline, poverty and demographic changes. The Horizons program in Kyle is coordinated by Sitting Bull College in Fort Yates, N.D. and includes reservation communities in North Dakota, South Dakota, and Minnesota.

``Native American students account for nearly 11 percent of enrollment at the state's public schools,'' said Keith Moore of the state Education Department. ``This conference brings together people involved in educating our native students to share their successes and to talk about strategies for addressing specific challenges.''

Sessions include teaching math in a cultural context, tribal perspectives on American history, online tutoring, addressing racism issues, the Department of Education said in a release.

learners," Riley said. "When you stop learning, life becomes pale and repetitious."

Rapid City schools are to be commended for their commitment to helping students maintain their culture, to see it as "an enhancement to life, not a barrier to learning," Riley said.

One program Riley will use in the district is REACH, an acronym for Respect Ethnic and Cultural Heritage, a professional development course for faculty and staff that emphasizes respect for all students' cultural heritage.

Not all solutions are within the school district's grasp, she said, but she wants to try to fix what she can and find out what is happening to the students who drop out.

Riley wants students to "look forward to school with eagerness and excitement." When students enter the school, they should be engaged in meaningful learning, look forward to the school day, and leave knowing more than they did when they arrived, she said.

And they should learn to develop strong relationships and "know there's a give and take."

Riley is particularly interested in getting parents involved in their children's education and making them feel welcome in the school, a key element of getting kids to stay in school. "It's nothing new," Riley said. "We know it works. We just have to make sure we do it."

Riley, a Lower Brule Lakota, grew up on Lower Brule Reservation and was educated at Stephan Indian School (now Crow Creek High School). She earned her undergraduate degree in elementary education at Black Hills State and master's degree in education at Weston State in Colorado.

Riley's first contract job was as a sixth-grade teacher at Robbinsdale Elementary School in Rapid City. After that, she spent 19 years in Salt Lake City school district as a teacher, principal, central office administrator, and assistant superintendent.

Violence against women and swift. People knew when they violated a woman, their life was at risk," added Nichole Witt, the shelter's grant manager.

More women now realize they don't have to stay in a bad situation and can get help if they are sexually abused, Black Bear said.

She said the catalyst was the 1994 Violence Against Women Act, which brought better training for police and more funding for prosecution. Rosebud was one of the first tribes to receive a grant under the act.

"It's not unusual for a woman to report that she was sexually violated or beaten. But before 1994, that stayed within the family," Black Bear said.

Still, the Justice Department reported in December that between 1993 and 2004, about 18 out of every 1,000 American Indian and native Alaskan women were victimized -- three times the rate among white women.

Part of that likely is due to substance abuse that's an underlying issue with many reservation families, Black Bear said.

"I think a majority of our youth are unhappy about their parents using alcohol and drugs," Black Bear said. "It steals their youth."

The domestic violence victim agreed.

"How many more kids are going to have to suffer? It's bad enough that the young kids are dying, 15, 14, 13, years old. And they're still babies. And it's got to be a wake up call," she said.

The rape victim said many of her friends confide in her parents because their own families ignore them.

"People come to my mom and dad and talk to them because their mom will just push them aside and pick up a beer and say, 'That's better,'" she said.

"So they turn to their friends and alcohol and drugs and say, 'Oh this is how my mom and dad deal with it and this is how we're going to deal with it.'"

Black Bear agreed much of the suicide problem stems from parents who aren't available to children because of their own alcohol and drug use.

"The suicides happen because people are making a permanent decision about a temporary problem. When a relationship goes bad or sour, what happens is many of these young people feel like there's no way out for them. There's no way to express their feelings, their pain or hurt, and suicide is an answer," she said.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am just inquisitive today and wanted to ask for some of your time and knowledge. I am currently involved with a man who has been a friend for a long time, when I first met him I thought of him to be too egotistical and almost "too" self confident.

We reconnected again this year and he seems to me a different man, he is a sun dancer, singer, sober man, and I admire and respect these qualities about him. He hints around and tells me he adores me, but yet never makes the first move. We have spent time together, and most recently spent some real quality time together which I thoroughly enjoyed. Is this the guy for me? Is he the one I was destined to meet?

He holds a lot of the qualities that I admire and respect in a man and would want in a companion.

One of the problems I see, is that he's never been married or had any children, which he tells me he really doesn't care to do, to bring children into today's world with all its problems.

But I question whether he is serious or if I will keep him from something, like having children of his own?? I hate to give up or lose him because of this. Although we've never been physically intimate, I wonder if he thinks about me like that, or is this just a friendship? Please help with some of your guidance.

Wondering if he is the one

Dear Wondering:

There is a lot going on here. He is interested in you as a person and as a potential lover. Please listen to him, because he is being totally honest when it comes to not having children. You and I could argue all day long about the condition of the world and bringing children into it; but he believes what he says. This points to another view or aspect of his relationship to the world: he believes the world is not a good place.

Not good enough to bring children into. Not good enough to be safe. These views will affect how he treats life and his own expectations of battle with the harder elements of a negative belief system. Remember, we create in our own lives that which we believe in the most. Hard line beliefs will echo out into the world and be reflected back at us by materializing into hard-line battles.

He is a good man. Please do not expect to change his views on children or having them. That is the big rub in this relationship. He is pretty honest in his approach to life and he has been honest with you. He wants to get to know you very well before you two experience intimacy. That is very respectful and healthy. He has a true heart and he has a strong connection to the Creator through his prayer and his pipe.

Allow time to develop the relationship. Also, get pretty clear with yourself about not having future children if you decide to focus on this man as being someone important in your life.

By the way, I see this man as being self-confident. I don't feel that attribute is negative. It is very important in a successful life to understand who you are and to accept and acknowledge what you are good at.

To simplify this idea here is something to consider: Would you want a doctor to work on you who didn't think he was very good? A mechanic to work on your car that didn't think he could fix it? A teacher to teach your children who didn't think he/she was a good teacher?

Please understand it is very healthy, emotionally, mentally, physically and spiritually to understand and accept the special qualities of self. I am telling you this because I see within you a lot of doubt as to your worth. Low self esteem destroys far more than potential relationships. It will destroy your life-path and rob you of success. Please accept your beauty and skills. It will enhance your life greatly. It will not place you above others, but help you to accept your equality with everyone in the world. It levels the playing field and allows you to walk beside the man in your future, not ten steps behind him.

Dear Anna,

How is everything going? Hope all is well and you are in good health. I am writing to you today because I think I have a problem and I need to solve it.

The thing is that I think I have a crush on one of my teachers. I know this is wrong and I shouldn't be thinking like this but I need some answers. What do you see happening this year? But the Crush on the teacher thing is what I mainly need help with. God bless you and thank you very much.

Crush and Confused

Dear Crush and Confused:

I am fine. Now, as to how you are: it is very common to develop strong emotional attachment to teachers, doctors, or others that lead us and help us on our life path.

Luckily for you, the crush will pass before you make an absolute fool of yourself.

I am not being cruel, just practical and telling you what I see. Perhaps by the time you read this letter you will begin to let go of the fantasy with this man.

This teacher is a good and kind man with commitments. Do yourself a favor and don't even try to go there. The outcome would be too embarrassing for words.

There is another "crush" coming your way very soon.

This one will be far more successful and fun and much more healthy for you. He is almost two years older than you, runs a lot, plays basketball, has one "soft" knee (it rolls), and he has a wonderful smile and a cutting edge sense of humor.

Good Luck and God Bless!

BID

The Bureau of Indian Affairs, Fort Berthold Agency is planning to conduct an Oil and Gas Sale within the next two (2) months. We will be offering all unleased allotted mineral acreage to the highest bidder through a competitive sealed bid process. We have established the primary terms of the lease as follows:

Minimum bonus per acre $75.00
Minimum annual rental rate per acre $2.50
Minimum royalty rate per acre 18%
Primary term of the lease 5 years

The approval of a mineral lease on the Fort Berthold Reservation is based on majority consent, under special authority enacted in 1998 and 1999, and codified under 25 U.S.C. 396. Upon completion of the competitive bid sale, leases will become effective, once the required number of owners have consented to lease and approved by the BIA Superintendent.

This decision is based upon the fact that Fort Berthold Agency has received numberous requests from prospective lessees to lease certain allotted minerals. Several lessees have been acquiring signatures for negotiated oil and gas leases on the Fort Berthold Reservation. While this attempt has been made in good faith, we feel it would be in the best interests of the allotted mineral owners to include their lands in an advertised lease sale in order to receive the optimum bonus consideration through competitive bid. We recommend the allotted mineral owners who are in negotiations for an oil and gas lease to give full consideration to this alternate option.

Those allotted mineral owners who do not wish to have their lands advertised in this competitive bid lease sale, please contact the Fort Berthold Agency in writing within (2) weeks of the date of this notice.

Our mailing address is as follows: Superintendent, PO Box 370, New Town, ND 58763. Our telephone number is (701) 627-4707.

Allen road proves fatal to infant

Road continues in legal limbo, on schedule to be fixed 2010

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

ALLEN - Briar Brown Bull-Martinez, an eight month old infant died in a one vehicle accident four and a half miles north of Highway 18 on the Allen road on Monday, Sept. 3.

"We were driving on that road and I hit some of those bumps and it just sent the pickup out of control and into the ditch," said Laretha Brown Bull, "when I came to, I found the pickup on top of me and my baby, I almost gave up then, I knew my baby didn't make it but I heard my two other children, Rose and Hans, calling for my help and I fought off everything and decided to live."

Young Briar was laid to rest on Saturday at St. Barnabas Church south of Kyle on Saturday. After hitting the deep ruts in the Allen road that day, the pickup went into the ditch and rolled one and a half times landing on Briar and her mother. Rose is out of the hospital after breaking her hip and ankle, Hands received internal bruises but is alright.

"We've known for quite a while that we need to rebuild the Allen road, right now it is on the state schedule for 2010," said Pat Byrne, Bennett County Road Superintendent, "it is an old road so we had trouble getting money to even fix it temporarily because it is so narrow, to meet standards today it has to be totally rebuilt - when we considered it a couple of years ago it was going to cost $4.8 million, we had only $2 million so we looked at working with the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Oglala Sioux Tribe."

Bennett County found out that if the BIA or the Tribe was to put money into the project, they would have to assume jurisdiction over the road. Bennett County opted to turn the jurisdiction over to the Bureau.

"We started working together on the road," said Jeff Whelan, OST Transportation director, "we gave some work orders to Pierre for our design group Dakota Engineering and it was going well but then Larry Long, South Dakota attorney general came down with a ruling that stated that Bennett County did not have the authority to give up jurisdiction of the road to the Bureau and the Tribe; that put a halt to any work orders being filled by Pierre."

According to Whelan, the cost today of rebuilding the nine mile Allen road is now about $8 million, the state still has their $2 million, we just need to come up with the rest.

"We really are in a legal limbo over this road," said Whelan, "the recent death of the young infant is a tragic fatality and our leaders, whether with the Bureau, the Tribe or the State need

Lower Brule Iraqi war veteran facing mistreatment by military

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

LOWER BRULE - Ryan LeCompte, 27, Lower Brule Sioux or kul wicasa oyate is facing a level of discrimination and mistreatment that many military veterans nationwide are becoming all too familiar with. Ever since the war resulted in a large number of wounded being shipped home the nation's military hospitals have been struggling to accommodate them.

The public rarely gets a glimpse of the exact struggle of any one soldier, however, LeCompte, is an accomplished soldier by any standard having been on 160 combat missions during two tours in Iraq and having earned the Army Commendation Medal on two occasions.

Tammie LeCompte, Ryan's wife, said, "He should have earned another award for saving his unit from attack.

LeCompte has been diagnosed with traumatic brain injury and post traumatic stress disorder and now the military wants to discharge him despite his medical conditions. The military has alleged that LeCompte missed formation and assaulted two soldiers.

"They had a chapter hearing on an administrative separation for Ryan on Sept. 10 and they want to give him a dishonorable discharge. Yesterday we celebrated eight years in the service. We had to meet with an attorney, Major Thompson, who said that Ryan is "malingering. They just want to get him out without paying for his care. The case is so complicated" said Tammie.

Tammie said she expects the post commander to make a decision in a few days. She said, "I just wished we could all get together and rally. There are others going through the same thing." She was appalled that the chief of staff has a sign which said "Do not delay, get them out, they are deadwood."

Among the Lakota, the military soldier or akicita is greatly honored and given appropriate respect that is in recognition of the warrior tradition that is highly regarded. His family wants him home to be sure so that he can heal.

Tammie has enlisted the help of Sen. Tim Johnson so that her husband will have a chance to avoid being dishonorably discharged from the U. S. Army and lose any claim to his benefits. Meanwhile, at Ft. Carson, Colo. Major General Robert Mixon will make a decision as to whether or not LeCompte should be discharged for misconduct. Tammie said, "He should be leaving on Sept. 14 and a new general will be briefed on Ryan's case."

Tammie apparently had to quit her job in order to care for her husband and also had to sell some of her household goods in order to pay the bills. The family is now eligible for food stamps.

Wright: Sicangu student chosen as Miss Indian Nations

BISMARCK, N.D.- Sheri Wright, Sicangu of Rosebud, is the new Miss Indian Nations. She was selected as the fifteenth Miss Indian Nations here on Sept. 8.

"I am honored to be chosen," said Wright after being crowned during the United Tribes International Powwow.

Miss Wright, 26, is the daughter of Lenard and Daisy Wright, Rosebud. She has one brother, Andrew, and one sister Lene, both of Rosebud.

Wright is a student at Sinte Gleska University, Rosebud. She has twice been selected Miss SGU Wikoshkalaka (Young Woman), attending cultural functions, performing Lakota sign language and public speaking.

Wright believed that she would be a good candidate for Miss Indian Nations. In a letter of intent she wrote that she is proud to be Native American. I know the history and culture and I am not afraid to express my feelings in public.

I come from humble surroundings and have empathy for the people and can relate to them, she wrote.

"Everyone says there's such helplessness in Indian County," Wright said tearfully to those attending the coronation. "But the young ladies in this program show that's not true. They inspired me."

Wright is a graduate of Todd County High School, Mission. She is vice president of the He Sapa Wacipi/Black Hills Powwow, and a former runner up in the Miss Indian Nations Program.

Following three days of judging, Miss Wright won the talent competi-

LeCompte's honored and heroic service to his country, however, they seem inclined to disavow any obligation to provide appropriate medical treatment for the nosebleeds, panic attacks, headaches and memory loss that is characteristic of brain injury and post traumatic stress disorder.

The Great Plains Tribal Chairmen's Association stepped in and passed a resolution on Sept. 6 in support of LeCompte which expresses outrage at the disrespect and lack of proper treatment of all returning soldiers. The resolution notes LeCompte's outstanding work as a soldier during Operation Iraqi Freedom. A list of demands asks that all soldiers be given complete medical and psychological treatment and benefits as befitting a United States soldier. It also calls upon the U. S. Congress to assure funding for healthcare for wounded soldiers and their families.

The GPTCA resolution also calls for the removal of the post commander at Ft. Carson, Colo. It reads, "Requests the removal of the Commander of Ft. Carson for the misstreatment of the soldiers under his command and calling the wounded soldiers, Dead Wood.

The native media is also called upon to get the word out on the treatment and abuse of returning soldiers, especially those who they label, "The Walking Wounded."

tion and the Miss Congeniality Award. After the coronation, Miss Wright was presented to the audience attending the powwow.

Competing for the national title were four other candidates from tribes around the country. Named First Runner Up was Tammara Rogers (Navajo/Zuni) Crown Point, NM. Selected Second Runner Up and also winning the Children's Choice Award was Ta Sunke Gli Nanji Win (Standing Rock Lakota) McLaughlin, SD. Third Runner Up and winner of the Presidential Award was Marcella Cruz (White Mountain Apache) White River, AZ. Mary Eagle (Standing Rock Sioux/Chippewa) Fort Yates, ND, received the Tribal Chairman's Award.

Miss Wright was presented with the crown by outgoing Miss Indian Nations Ponka-We Victors (Tohono O'odam) Wichita, Kan.

Participants were judged on traditional skills, public appearance and presentations, communication skill and speaking ability, personal conduct, and answers to general and impromptu questions.

The Miss Indian Nations program is open to single, non-parent American Indian women ages 17 to 26. Miss Wright will serve for one year as a cultural ambassador. United Tribes Technical College coordinates her public appearances. Sponsorships and contributions are accepted to help underwrite the program.

For more information or to schedule an appearance, contact Miss Indian Nations at United Tribes Technical College, 3315 University Drive, Bismarck, ND, 58504, 701-255-3285.

to find a solution so we do not have additional senseless fatalities on the Allen road."

John Baxter, associate administrator for the Federal Lands Highway, an agency under the Federal Highway Administration, and his associate Bob Sparrow were in town on Tuesday to visit Whelan and took the time to visit the Allen road, took pictures and attempted to check out the actual accident site where Brown Bull lost control and went off the road. Baxter and Sparrow were joined by Mark Hoines and John Ross, two federal highway staff members who work in Pierre.

"We are only just now working out our own funding, we have left the 638 world under the tribe and we are just now going to get our 2007 monies directly from the FHA," said Whelan, "I don't know what is available for emergency funding, whether we would be eligible or how long it would take to come down the pipeline, I just know that the need is there."

Currently OST Transportation is finishing up the coordination of the new roads in Sunrise Housing, east of Martin, completing three bridges, two north of Manderson and one by Kyle, constructing the new transit building east of Pine Ridge, getting ready for the golf course housing road and finally Wounded Knee looking at late summer, early fall of 2008 to start that long overdue project.

Storytelling contest at LNI open to Lakota/Dakota students

BROOKINGS - The Department of Journalism and Mass Communication at South Dakota State University is helping to add a Lakota/Dakota Storytelling Competition to the 31st annual Lakota Nation Invitational with funding from the South Dakota Humanities Council.

The competition will be held during the LNI on Dec. 19-22 at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center in Rapid City.

In September and October, Doris Giago, SDSU associate professor of journalism, will visit schools around the state to distribute teaching materials and promote the contest.

She will also be available to teach a 50-minute lesson on storytelling during her visits.

While basketball is the major focus of LNI, the tournament also includes knowledge and language bowls, an art show, a hand game competition, and wrestling and boxing matches.

"The academic portion of LNI demonstrates to students that there is more to school than sports," said Bryan Brewer, LNI coordinator. "We are adding this competition to the line-up of events because storytelling is an important part of Lakota/Dakota culture that is dying out. This competition is a step in the right direction toward reviving it."

For the storytelling competition, Native American high school students will tell stories in three different categories: traditional stories told in a native language or in English, contemporary stories that blend today's experiences into the traditional storytelling framework and issue-based stories on important topics in Indian Country.

"Holding the event during the LNI in December is particularly appropriate because among Indian tribes throughout America, winter is storytelling time," said Mary Arnold, head of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communication. "But young people are encouraged to start preparing for the storytelling competition now," she continued.

Jerome Kills Small, Oglala Lakota tribal member from Porcupine on the Pine Ridge Reservation and traditional storyteller will assist with the judging and give a storytelling performance during the LNI.

Kills Small also teaches Lakota language courses at the University of South Dakota.

The competition is free of charge and open to all Native American high school students. The deadline to register for the competition is Dec. 1.

Contest materials were mailed to schools in July. Those wanting additional information should contact Giago at doris.giago@sdstate.edu or 605-688-6236.

John Around Him memorial set for Father's Day

It's only been a year since you left us for the spirit world on Sept. 20. Dad, it's been lonely here without you. We remember all that we did as a family.

But, you have built a strong foundation for us as your children. Everyday, we do our best to carry ourselves with all you taught us. We remember all the funny things we did, cry when we were sad, But most of all we were always there for each other. We continue to help and support each other in hard times and good times.

That is what you taught us as your children. Dad, we arent't the only ones who mourned for you throughout this past year. There are many relatives you made and a lot of lives you touched.

Yes, we all cry and remember all that you have done for each and every one of us. But, most of all like you said "Life must go on". So, we all hold those memories close to our hearts and will never forget you in our lives. Dad, we are glad that we got o share you with many, many people in this world.

Thank you
Your children

Elders games promote elder's role, family

Sicangu elder, Genevieve White Wing, of Rosebud provided instructions on the Lakota "Shinney" game during the 21st Annual Sicangu Elder Games held at the old St. Francis Indian School track . White Wing worked for many years for South Dakota Social Services.

ST. FRANCIS - Elders, their families, volunteers and advocates from across surrounding areas turned out for this year's Elder Games, held last week end at the old track field at St.Francis Indian School.

The Elder Games remain a truly inter-generational event with ages of those present, ranging from toddlers to 86 years of age. The Sicangu Elderly Concerns, sponsor of the event continues to highlight the necessity of those positive relationships between various age groups and Elders in all families and communities and that it does not take a grant or any public funding at all to promote such relationships. Sicangu Elderly Concerns notes that those positive relationships and a sense of community, where people look out for each other voluntarily, reinforce those 'Good Hearted Lakota Ways', which comprise the foundation of families and communities.

The results of the 21st Annual Elder Games are listed below. Every elder participant received an Elder Games T-shirt, a certificate, and an Olympic medallion, while volunteers received T-shirts and certificates. Participants are listed by age groups and then alphabetically within that group.

Those placing in the different categories were Harvey Jordan, Richard Standing Bear, Eugene Iron Shell, Leroy Hairy Shirt, Chris Scissons, Roy Spotted War Bonnet, Roy Stone, Sr., Conrad Black Bear, Gary , Don , Ada Gunhammer, Hilda White, Claudette Sabor, Gloria Sitting , Shirley Iron and Dorothy Edwards.

The Elder Games remains a totally volunteer event, sponsored by Sicangu Elderly Concerns and is made possible through the efforts of the following volunteers:

Zack Simmons, Darrell Bear Robe Sr., Darrell Bear Robe Jr., Brenda Sitting Bear, Clayton Standing Bear, Dorothy Edwards, Lester Buddy Edwards, and Theresa Walters.

The primary goal of Sicangu Elderly Concerns has been and remains to promote acknowledgement of and respect for the traditional role of Elder and the relationship of that role to families, communities, and individuals.

A quiet storm about mining

By Natalie Hand
Special to the Times

A quiet storm is building on the reservation these days. There is a New York-based company called Native American Energy Group that has infiltrated the reservation.

What is N.A.E.G.?

N.A.E.G. is a publicly traded company that bills itself as, "an independent energy resource development and management company". N.A.E.G. was recently bonded in August, 2005 by the Department of the Interior to acquire, develop and produce oil/gas/mining exploration on all federally recognized Indian reservations in the U.S. Their foremost endeavor into Indian Country is presently on and near the Ft. Peck Reservation in Montana, where there are conducting oil and gas exploration/production.

Meeting N.A.E.G.

I received a warm welcome when I visited the N.A.E.G. office located in old I.H.S. housing in Pine Ridge Village. I was met there by Tony Johnson, Senior Geologist & Petroleum Engineer, and Eileen Janis. Ms. Janis informed me that she was no longer a tribal employee and she was working with N.A.E.G. as a favor to Leonard Peltier, political prisoner. According to Ms. Janis, it was Leonard who made first contact with N.A.E.G. and asked them to help the Oglala Lakota get housing.

According to their account, Mr. Johnson stated that initially his company did come to Pine Ridge with the intent to assist with the housing shortage here. They had a heady goal of up to 4,000 homes for needy families. N.A.E.G. stated that they will seek grants and federal funding through the Housing & Urban Development program to get the houses built. Energy-efficient homes are costly to build and maintain and as N.A.E.G. put it, "We need to help the Lakota generate income to maintain these homes."

N.A.E.G.'s webpage states, "…covering more than 50 million acres in the West, Indian Country encompasses large areas of oil and gas and other mineral production regions of current exploration activity and many vast areas yet to be investigated in detail."

In April of this year, N.A.E.G.'s CEO Joseph D'Arrigo and CFO Raj Nanvaan (a.k.a. Tejbir Singh) met with Michael Catches The Enemy, Director of Natural Resources and the point of contact on mining and with other members of the OST Environmental Heath Technical Team. N.A.E.G. indicated that in order to facilitate construction and relocation, they would need to partner with OST to "tap into the Tribe's natural resources" to finance such a plan. According to Mr. Johnson, the language in the initial "Private Placement Presentation For The Project Financing of Exploration and Mining of Uranium on the Tribal Lands of the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation" presented to the Tribe was "…just the hook to get the investors on board. We don't actually have plans to mine anything on Pine Ridge…unless that is what the tribal members want."

It's Just A Water & Soil Study

By July, 2007, it had become increasingly apparent to N.A.E.G. that they were losing ground on their long-range "energy resource development" project. On July 13, 2007, under extreme scrutiny from concerned tribal members and unfavorable reports from the OST Environmental Health Technical Team, President Steele wrote a letter to N.A.E.G. executives canceling future meetings and directing them to cease all types of business ventures on the Pine Ridge Reservation. Tribal sources indicated that shortly after receiving the correspondence, N.A.E.G. executives contacted President Steele, at which a July 21-23rd meeting was held.

What plans came out of that meeting remain a mystery, but all involved came away with a new strategy…a "comprehensive water and soil study/education campaign." Mr. Johnson informed me that to create infrastructure on the reservation, we must first conduct a water study and educate the tribal membership on the results and what should be done with the water. The basis of this perspective is a 1992-97 U.S.G.S. water study conducted on Pine Ridge which showed maximum contamination levels in our ground and surface water. N.A.E.G. is utilizing this study to "educate" and win-over tribal members to get them to approve of their plan.

Tribal Perspective

N.A.E.G.'s argument is that there has been no recent comprehensive heavy metals/minerals study conducted and studies done by the OST Environmental Protection Program and OST Rural Water Department are only bacterial tests, a claim that is vigorously disputed by both offices. According to the OST Rural Water Department, the minerals found to be present in their studies of the public water system are "naturally occurring" and do not pose a health threat at this time. However, they stressed the fact that they have no control over private-owned wells.

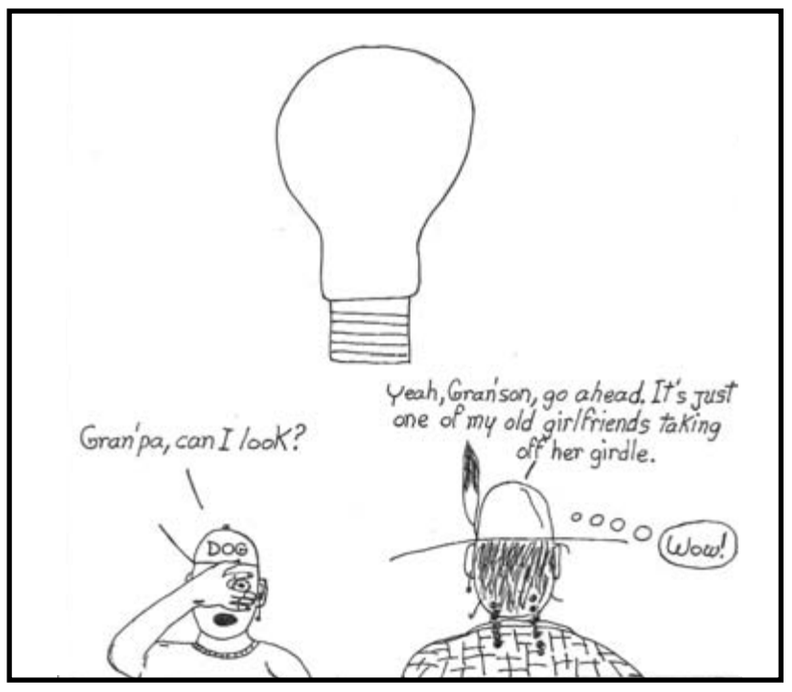
Bob Pille, Director of OST Environmental Protection Program, stated, "The U.S.G.S. water study was, which is what N.A.E.G. is basing their argument on, is irrelevant. We disproved that report sometime ago by conducting our own study. The contamination levels were significantly lower than what U.S.G.S. was reporting. We believe that their study had inconsistencies because they used a mobile lab which may have been contaminated." While Mr. Pille and his co-workers agree that a comprehensive water study would be welcomed, they believe that N.A.E.G. has ulterior motives, based on their proposed "Master Consulting Agreement". In that initial agreement, N.A.E.G. wanted exclusive rights and first right-of-refusal to "…minimize and ultimately eliminate the health threats to members of the Tribe" and "…remove contaminating minerals to be sold for commercial uses…" (I.e. In-Situ Leach Mining).

According to literature distributed by OST Natural Resources, once in-situ leach mining has ceased at a mine site, it takes decades to restore the water source and "…no aquifer in the United States has ever been returned to it's pre-mined state." Radioactive wastewater from the mine is often stored in an evaporation pond, releasing radon gas (usually associated with lung disease) into the atmosphere.

In a recent education campaign flier distributed by Owe Aku's (Bring Back The Way) Debra White Plume, it is noted that there is in-situ leach mining presently happening within our treaty territory in Crawford, Nebraska. The "Crow Butte Uranium Mine" sits atop the High Plains Aquifer that flows into the Eastern portion of the Pine Ridge Reservation. The report states, "…Crow Butte Uranium Mine has spilled or leaked thousands of gallons of contaminated water into our land, air and ground water." Mrs. White Plume is organizing the "Crying Earth Rise Up! Uranium Summit" to take place on Pine Ridge in October to further educate the Tribe on the irreversible effects of uranium mining. She is hopeful that the OST Environmental Health Technical Team will co-sponsor the summit.

In a recent Red Shirt Village Community Meeting, a known "hot spot" full of uranium and other minerals, residents overwhelming voted to support OST Council Resolution #07-154, which supports the decision to cease business with N.A.E.G. for uranium mining.

N.A.E.G. and Ms. Janis insist that there are no plans to pursue mining on Pine Ridge and that N.A.E.G. is not in the mining business. However, Mr. Johnson stated that once the Tribe sees the result of their water/soil study, N.A.E.G. wishes to have first rights to "clean up the water" (mining). But he concedes, "…a referendum vote would be required to approve that".



Exercising The Treaty

On Sept. 9, the Oglala Band of the Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council issued a position statement to the Oglala Sioux Tribal Court declaring their opposition to N.A.E.G. and called for their removal from the reservation based on Article 1 of the 1851/1868 Ft. Laramie Treaty. Article 1 states, "If bad men among the whites, or among other people subject to the authority of the United States, shall commit any wrong upon the person or property of the Indians, the United States will, upon proof made to the agent and forwarded to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs at Washington City, proceed at once to cause the offender to be arrested and punished according to the laws of the United States, and also re-imburse the injured person for the loss sustained."

OST Chief Judge Lisa Adams held a preliminary hearing later that day and, upon hearing testimony, granted a "show cause hearing" to be scheduled on September 24, 2007. At that time, if they so choose, N.A.E.G. representatives can make their case.

Final Thoughts

If N.A.E.G. was true to their word and only wanted to help the Oglala Lakota Oyate, then there wouldn't be "strings attached" to their partnership.

Reflecting back on 9/11

Wanblii Ake Glii

Another remembrance of 9/11 has come and gone again. Who can ever forget that day? After all it made history as America watched those towers burn and fall to the ground.

A few thousand perished and a nation was dumb founded at the sight. With no understanding of why it happened, they glued their eyes to the television like never before. But they were deceived and given only lies disguised as truth. Why? Because little did they know their corporate-media had been sleeping with the government for quite some time, and their questions were answered with only dishonesty.

I myself will never forget that day either because it was a day I began to question the reality of my people and the past and present scheme.. It wasn't until years later, though, that I looked back, made the similarity, and realized that what once happened to my people in terms of genocide had already happened to another people. Only they were from across that very ocean.

I came to realize later that America has a long history of addiction for war, power and colonization that goes back more than a hundred years. It all seemed to begin in the Philippines back in 1899 where the United States Army was employed to help civilize and Christianize the indigenous people, but instead killed them in the tens of thousands, burned their villages, tortured them and in the process laid the foundation for future exploitation of their land and economy. The country eventually fell into the control of the U.S. but not without a fight from the common people. Only they never stood a chance in regaining their self-government because their very own people within their organization of government and society were corrupted and they were puppets for the U.S.

I thought to myself, "Wow! That is the same thing that happened to my people and its still going on!" I also learned this sort of thing happened in many other countries throughout the next hundred years. And most, if not all, of these involvements that the U.S. was concerned with were for crooked reasons, but the people in America were always given the false idea that it was out of goodwill or maintaining freedom and teaching democracy.

In learning all this untold history about America I found out they (Britain and America) have been in the Middle East since the mid-20th century trying to gain control of the largest and richest oil reserves in the world. And I thought to myself again, "That is pretty similar to what happened to our Black Hills and the gold and natural resources that were stolen there from us." But the reason that stuck out plainly for me was that in Aug. 1990 the United Nation's (America and Britain) took illegal action against their puppet Saddam Hussein and it resulted in the deaths of 500,000 innocent Iraqi children under the age of 5. Then I read about Madeline Albright (the U.S. ambassador to the United Nations at that time) and how she was given the figure of half a million innocent deaths and says, "We think it was worth it." And to recall the words of General Norman Schwartzkopf, referring to 100,000 dead Iraqi's as, "collateral damage," gave me the insight to understand why these 9/11 attacks happened and why we don't ever hear the truth on television. Because the media are corporations and they are Uncle Sam's big pocket and he simply puts profit margins before truth.

So, if one is to reflect back on the events of 9/11 and try and make sense of it all, one must also reflect back even further into America's long history of always pushing others around. They don't realize that their government has done the same thing to many other peoples around the world that it once did to our people and all our Indigenous relatives in the founding of the Americas. They failed to notice that sometimes when you push other people they push back and that is precisely what happened in September of 2001.

It is a shame that all those lives were lost on 9/11 and my feelings go out to the families who lost loved ones, but my feelings also go out to the innocent children of the Middle East and the countless other death's that came as a result of our country's greed.

Hundreds of wolves will be killed

Dear Editor:

Hundreds of wolves will be killed in Idaho and Wyoming by barbaric hunting by plane unless legislation is passed by U.S. Rep. George Miller, Democrat, CA. to stop this practice. Already these states are acquiring helicopters and hunters. The Bush Administration has given the green light to the Republican Governors. In fact, Gov. Otto of Idaho has expressed his desire to kill the first wolf. Several hundred, 75 percent of the wolf population, would be hunted to death. Many environmental groups are lobbying to stop this and a petition has been signed by 40,000 wolf supporters (www.savethewolves.org).

An obligation to learn the language

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I learn something every time I visit with kola, Francis Whitebird, a fellow Vietnam Veteran and Harvard graduate. Our paths in life have been somewhat parallel as we both worked at Sinte Gleska University in some capacity as well. We find ourselves 30 years later to the day discussing some of the issues we encountered back then, but our sights are tinged with a bit more wisdom and experience.

Francis has become a great advocate for perpetuating the Lakota language, just as I have, and is working on a manuscript in which he illustrates a greater depth of Lakota language analysis and understanding. He says that anyone who uses their blood quantum to qualify for services through the Indian Health Services and Bureau of Indian Affairs has an obligation to learn Lakota and pass it on to the young. That is a refreshing stance to take and, in theory, it would be great if that held true.

One issue that inhibits folks from learning Lakota is that they were influenced to believe that Lakota isn't quite as legitimate as English out in mainstream society and that it might somehow hold people back. I understand that sentiment, but I was fortunate enough to gain a foundation of sorts in Lakota when growing up. Mostly I listened as we are supposed to do and was able to gain enough of a basic understanding to do and was able to gain enough of a basic understanding to know when a new word could be added to my vocabulary.

I think the decision to learn Lakota is a very important choice as we often see officials who prominent, however, they remain in the minority when it comes to language proficiency. I am somewhat guilty of that as I am not promoting that enough with my child and I need to. I would say that at least he is familiar with the sounds of Lakota as he has listened to my commercials on KINI FM enough times. In my professional capacity, we want to increase Lakota language usage in the spring by offering it to people and then, having them turn around and teach some basic lessons to others. I think that is when I will concentrate very hard on working with number two son.

I recall one time in the late 1970's when I interrupted a conversation between Stanley Red Bird, Sr. and Bill Schweigman as I wanted him to translate a Lakota word or lakol wico'iye. Schweigman proceeded to say in Lakota tu'wa Lakota sloliye c'in hantas inila angoptan yankapi waste'. His message was obviously directed at me when he said, "If someone want to know Lakota then have to sit and listen quietly."

It was a valuable lesson for me as I still listen quietly when I am in a setting where Lakota being spoken. When I attended the wake for kola Willie Bad Had, Jim Clairmont spent a lot of time speaking English to the crowd as he noted that many of the younger people do not speak Lakota anymore. When he did speak Lakota, along with Everett "Butch" Felix, I listened for a new word, or two.

As we were having coffee this morning Francis relayed a couple of words that I was unfamiliar with and I was thankful. He noted that the older people used the term anpocuniya to mean "breath in the morning that you can see." A couple of others not in use included cakala which means "liar" and si'ceca which refers to children at the next level beyond wakanyeja.

The richness of learning Lakota lies in one's ability to be patient, to listen and to practice quietly. There are many words that were used by our elders and do not get much use and we need to be still as we discover what those wico'iye just might be.

Dr. Archie Beauvais, (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and currently works as the director of the Lakota language preservation project for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

The wolves were introduced in 1995 into Idaho to reestablish the species. With wolves taken off the Endangered Species listing by the Republican Bush Administration, the wolves are once again pitifully fair game to be slaughtered. Trophy sports hunters and ranchers are in favor of the wolf kill.

The wolves need your help and compassion! This is the same type of thinking that killed off the buffalo, forests, and native people. They believe people are superior and that wolves are a disposable commodity. We know better. The cry of wolves is beautiful and soulful. We need to protect them.

Notes From Indian Country

Bringing a dark chapter in Oglala history to an end

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Ordinarily I do not respond to attacks upon my column unless the attacks are laced with untruths. A response to my column about the American Indian Movement and its involvement in the death of Anna Mae Pictou Aquash by Bill Means does deserve a response.

A member of AIM, Arlo Looking Cloud, was convicted as a participant in the death of Anna Mae. This is a fact. Most of the items in my column about events leading up to her death and after are well documented in the court records of the Looking Cloud trial. Anyone wishing to have access to those court documents will find them readily available.

John "Boy" Graham will eventually be extradited from Canada and he will stand trial for Anna Mae's murder. Bill Means will then have the opportunity to defend AIM in a court of law and as he suggests, "AIM will stand before any court and compare our record with the FBI." The trial will determine the righteousness of his comment.

Means also claims, "Over eighty Oglala tribal members were killed by the 'goons' between 1973 and 1976 and no one was ever charged and many of these deaths were not investigated. The only reason these people were killed is because they were identified as AIM members." I have a lot of respect for Bill Means, but this statement is not true and is one of the main focal points of AIM's distortion of the facts.

When I was the editor of the Indian Country Today, we published a list of every member of the Oglala Lakota tribe killed from 1973 to 1976. Only a couple of the deaths were questionable.

Nearly every death was related to domestic violence, suicide, accidents or killings while the perpetrator was intoxicated. Every death was thoroughly investigated by the Oglala Tribal Police and the FBI. In most of the cases the killers were identified, tried and convicted. This information is also readily available to anyone interested in obtaining it.

Although undermanned and under funded, the Oglala Public Safety Commission has done an excellent job in their efforts to maintain law and order on the Pine Ridge Reservation since the occupation of Wounded Knee.

I have no axe to grind with any member of the American Indian Movement. And for the record, I have no envy or jealousy of Russell Means, Dennis Banks, Bill Means, or of Clyde or Vernon Bellecourt. Over the years I have worked with Vernon Bellecourt on the issue of using Indians as mascots. We have worked well together and have even become friends.

Many members of AIM have gone on to establish worthwhile social projects and business enterprises. And when the infighting within AIM became unbearable to some, they simply dropped out of the organization and moved on with their lives.

I believe that the occupation of Wounded Knee by AIM in 1973 was wrong. For some to call it the "Liberation of Wounded Knee" is patently ridiculous. An entire village, trading post and a church were completely destroyed. Nearly 30 families were left homeless. No one, not AIM or the tribal government, has made an effort to rebuild the homes that were destroyed and members of the Wounded Knee community have pleaded and begged for 34 years to get the help so that they can move home.

The occupation of Wounded Knee did nothing to elevate the lives of the people of the Pine Ridge Reservation. In fact, the violence and appearance of lawlessness had just the opposite effect. Many programs earmarked for the reservation were canceled and several businesses wishing to build on the reservation withdrew their applications. Seven years after the occupation the Pine Ridge Reservation earned the dubious distinction by the U. S. Census Bureau of being declared the "Poorest County in America."

The trial of John "Boy" Graham will, in all likelihood, reveal many more moments in the history of AIM that will not be appealing. The trial will probably take place in the federal courthouse in Rapid City, SD in 2008.

I wrote articles questioning the leadership and the tactics of AIM 27 years ago and have written several articles since then. For my efforts my newspaper had its windows blasted out and an attempt was made to burn my building to the ground in 1982 and my life and that of my family was threatened.

My articles questioned the continued violence and confrontations between the different factions on the Pine Ridge Reservation. It took the courage of Oglala tribal president Joe American Horse, standing up on the council floor to defend my newspaper, that finally brought the assaults upon the Lakota Times to an end.

As it was then and it is now, my only purpose in writing about AIM, the Oglala Sioux Tribal Government and the FBI in those days was in an effort to seek out truth and justice.

I hope that the trial of John "Boy" Graham will bring further closure to the family of Anna Mae Pictou Aquash, and that a dark chapter in the history of the Oglala Lakota Nation will come to an end.

Mustangs hold CEB Braves to six points, win third straight in new season

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

KYLE - Kevin Hunter reeled off a 60 yard touchdown run and Trin In The Woods hit Brice Hornbeck on a 22 yard pass play and followed it up with quarterback sneak to give Little Wound a 14-0 lead over Cheyenne Eagle Butte Friday on the way to the Mustangs 22-6 win over the Braves.

"Each game we're getting better, our defense played well to hold CEB down to just six points," said Darrel Hunter, Little Wound coach, "we did a lot better hanging onto the ball, we just need to keep improving each week and we need to work on our passing game."

Kael Whirlwind Horse put Eagle Butte's only points on the board with a two yard run midway through the second. In the Woods threw a pass that bounced off a defender into Hornbeck's arms for his second TD pass of the game and another quarterback sneak for two points in the third quarter to close out the scoring for both teams making it 22-6.

Hunter finished off a good day with 10 carries for 112 yards and a touchdown. In the Woods was four of six passing for 62 yards and two TD's while Hornbeck caught four passes for 97 yards and two scores. Casey Montileaux ran five times for 51 yards, JC Mesteth eight times for 31 yards and Hornbeck three carries for 20 yards. On the other side of the ball, Mesteth led the way with 12 tackles and a sack, Michael Pretty Voice Crane had seven tackles, Corey Young had six tackles and a sack, Arlin Cuny five tackles and Brett Thunder Hawk four tackles. Hornbeck had an interception and a return for 61 yards.

Little Wound is now 3-0 and travels to Crow Creek for a 1:30 p.m. game on Friday.

Todd County clubs Crow Creek 53-0 for third win

MISSION - "We challenged the boys to play with the same intensity level whether they were down by a point or up by 20," said Bob Kornely, Todd County Falcons head coach after his team held Crow Creek to just two yards on offense on 21 plays forcing six turnovers on the way to a 53-0 win, "the challenge worked, we had fewer penalties, good balance on offense with 129 through the air and 271 on the ground and improved line play on both offense and defense."

Gunner Krogman opened the scoring by tackling a Crow Creek player in the end zone for a safety, CJ Spotted Tail followed it up with a 21 yard scoring strike to Jaden Allen. Krogman then ran for five yards for the first of his three touchdowns, he followed that up with scores of two yards and 28 yards. Mike Neiss scored twice catching a 32 yard TD pass from Spotted Tail and on a 15 yard run. Aaron Stoddard scored on a 14 yard run and Noah Kalonzo finished up the scoring with a three yard run.

Krogman had 99 yards on nine carries, Spotted Tail was three of five for 129 yards and two touchdowns, Allen had two catches for 66 yards and five tackles on defense. Krogman led the defense with 15 tackles, one sack and a safety.

Todd County is now 3-0 and travels to Custer for a 7 p.m. CT game on Friday night.

Red Cloud shuts down Pine Ridge for first win of the season

PINE RIDGE - Red Cloud and Pine Ridge renewed their long rivalry in football on Friday at the Bob Clifford Memorial field at Red Cloud, both teams came out tentative, both started with turnovers; Red Cloud, though, turned a missed scoring opportunity deep in Pine Ridge territory early in the first period into a two point safety and used that to get some momentum going on to beat the Thorpes for the first time in 10 years 46-0.

Red Cloud dominated the line of scrimmage and used a powerful ground game to churn up yards. Billy Scott dove over the goal line from four yards out to get the Crusaders their first touchdown for an 8-0 lead with less than a minute to go in the first quarter. On the next series, Art Vitalis, a senior Red Cloud cornerback, intercepted a Harley Cortier pass at the Pine Ridge 45 yard line and ran it back 25 yards to the 20. Lester Gotheridge punched it over from the one yard line and Vitalis caught a Jeremy Blacksmith pass on a quick slant route to give Red Cloud a 16-0 lead early in the second.

Roman White calf recovered a Thorpe fumble on the Pine Ridge 15 yard line and Billy Scott ran it over from the 15, Ken Franks caught a two point conversion pass on a nifty look-away from Blacksmith to close out the first half scoring with Red Cloud up 24-0.

"Our offensive and defensive lines stepped up and got the job done," said Keith Ferguson, Red Cloud's coach, "I've told the team regularly that our line play is going to win games for us."

Pine Ridge blocked Dave Giago's punt early in the third period but couldn't take advantage of the good field position. Gotheridge finished off another Red Cloud offensive drive with an eight yard touchdown run, Billy Scott caught the two point pass from Blacksmith and Red Cloud was up 32-0. On the next Thorpe drive, Jacey Twiss intercepted a pass on the Pine Ridge 42 yard line and Vitalis turned an end around that was in trouble behind the line of scrimmage into a twisting, creative 42 yard run for a touchdown, Dustin Brewer bulled his way over the goal line for a two point conversion. The game ended late in the third when Dominic LeBeau, a 130 pound running back sliced his way into the end zone for the Crusaders final score and a 46-0 win over their cross town rival, Pine Ridge.

"Its about confidence and this game helped our confidence immeasurably, said Ferguson, "our running game was solid and we are working on our passing game every day, we will have a balance, Jeremy has it down in practice and he just needs to get used to the speed of a real game, he's young but he has what it takes and he will get better each game."

Red Cloud finished with 31 rushes for 320 yards as Carl Swallow, a sophomore running back and back-up QB carried nine times for 122 yards, Scott didn't have a carry in the second half and finished up with 10 carries for 81 yards and two touchdowns. Gotheridge ran six times for 34 yrds aNd two scores. Blacksmith was four of nine in the air for 19 yards, three two point conversions and two interceptions.

Red Cloud is now 1-1 and travels to St. Francis on Friday for a 7 p.m. CT game.

Native Era nominated for Native American Music Awards

PINE RIDGE - Billy Janis and Hope Brings Plenty of Native Era are justifiably excited as they have been nominated as best Debut Duo or Group of the Year by the ninth annual Native American Music Awards. The Native American hip-hop and R&B group was hoping to be nominated in the hip-hop category; however, receiving the nominations they did is a great honor.

Ever since the group debuted in 2002 on the Pine Ridge reservation, they have been playing at schools, fairs and other venues and their music has served as a positive message to Native youth. Their music apparently avoids the use of profanity and this further enhances their image among their younger listeners and fans.

Brings Plenty is "Lady Hope" and Janis is "The Futuristicmista" and their first production was a video for PBS entitled "We're Still Here" and it was followed by an album, "Tears of the Nation - Our Voice." They also have another entitled, "Where We Are."

Native Era has demonstrated its endurance and viability as a local hip-hop group and as a representative of the Lakota people; they continue to make their presence known on the northern plains and beyond. Readers can go to www.nativeamericanmusicawards.com to see a complete listing of those nominated this year.

Billy Janis and Hope Brings Plenty.

The group is heard regularly on the Rosebud reservation also, as their work is highlighted on KINI FM radio in St. Francis with a short public service announcement. Fans can access their website at www.myspace.com/nativeera or contact them at nativeera@gmail.com. Finally, voters can go to www.votenative.com and vote for Native Era for "Best Duo or Group of the Year." Visitors to the vote native website can click on instructions on how to navigate the site as there are too many categories to list here.

Challenges to the RST primary election continued

ROSEBUD - KINI FM radio broadcast the Rosebud Sioux tribal primary election results all weekend and further announced them as certified with the exception of two challenges which had been filed by the last Friday of the week during which the results were prominently posted in public locations for the tribal membership to view.

According to the RST election code, the procedure for filing a challenge to the election results is clearly outlined. A tribal member must file his or her challenge with a fee by the deadline and is afforded the opportunity to gather evidence, subpoena witnesses, hire counsel and even cross examine witnesses as needed.

The public service announcement made note of the fact that the two challenges which originated from District 3 Antelope and District 7 Grass Mountain and Upper Cut Meat would be heard on Monday morning September 10 in the RST council chambers.

As it turned out, the challenges were continued until Thursday, September 13 in order to afford due process to those individuals who were to be heard from regarding the challenge. The individuals apparently did not receive their notice of a hearing from the RST election committee until last Friday and due process allows them to notify and assemble witnesses and hire counsel and they simply did not have time to accomplish that.

In the challenge from Antelope community member O.J. Semans, alleged that the sergeant at arms for the election committee was involved in the ballot counting process by writing down the votes without verifying the name and number with at least one other election committee member. His complaint also noted that there was no tally board for the public to see. He said that the RST election committee will hear his complaint on Thursday at 11:00 a.m. and has agreed to conduct a recount of the Antelope council representatives contest votes.

The complaint from Grass Mountain and Upper Cut Meat community alleged that one of the candidates on the ballot had his or her name spelled incorrectly.

These two challenges were filed as election irregularities and their disposition will be up to the RST election committee which has a great deal of discretion and authority in resolving the matter.

Cante Wanjil project works with inmates

PINE RIDGE - Cante Wanjila, (One Heart) an OST Offender Re-entry and Support Project is a grass roots, community based organization created to help offenders re-entering the community.

Cante Wanjila believes that re-entry begins while incarcerated. Cante Wanjila commenced to work in August 2006. The project is there to support religious freedom, human rights and serves as a watchdog for legal and civil rights violations for offenders incarcerated. Cante Wanjila's goal is to work for offender prevention and help reduce the recidivism rate, through de-colonization and cultural preservation, presentations.

The office is located at the old Pine Ridge hospital. The project coordinator is Michelle Tyron who is also the Prison Liaison for the Oglala Sioux Tribe. The project is not federally funded nor is it funded by the state. Volunteers do the work that is provided to the offenders.

In the past year Cante Wanjila has made 13 visits to the men and women's correctional facilities across the state and has attended pow wows, and spiritual conferences organized by the Native inmate organizations. Cante Wanjila provides cultural presentations to the Native inmates including de-colonization sessions, assists with letters to the parole board for Parole Hearings, sends supplies to the native organizations like sage, cedar, cansasa, wood to build inipi, and drums. Cante Wanjila's Spiritual Advisor conducts ceremonies. And pours water with Native male and female offenders while housed in the Correctional Facilities, and also offers inicaga when they are released.

We are organizing different projects that benefit and include Native inmates and would appreciate any financial assistance or donations, specifically toiletries, clothing and office supplies including computers, and computer software, and supplies for inmate organizations for their ceremonies like cedar, tobacco, sage, cansasa, (kinicnic).

We are currently working on securing a building for a center for the offenders, and applying for grants everywhere. The work Cante Wanjila does to assist offenders is to benefit the offender and the community. Kyle woman sentenced for bootlegging

RAPID CITY- A 42-year-old from Kyle has become the third woman prosecuted in federal court this year for bootlegging on the dry Pine Ridge Reservation.

Judy Lays Hard has been sentenced to eight months in prison. She pleaded guilty to two counts of illegally dispensing intoxicants in Indian Country.

U.S. Attorney Marty Jackley said federal authorities increased enforcement after requests from elders and tribal leaders at Pine Ridge, the only South Dakota reservation where alcohol is banned. That means it's the only reservation where the federal law is enforced.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am an 86-year-old wasicu who admires your wisdom and who reads your column every week and I would like you to help me.

It is my second marriage which is now 15 years old and I am having a miserable time of it. I have a spiritual life that is just barely sustaining my serenity in the face of a spouse who has totally negative feelings.

We live in an assisted living residence where I see things as being very good for old people. Did I say she is 88?

Not an incident or an event in our lives passes without her commenting about it. These comments are how bad the thing is, or how it should be better because of what it costs. If it isn't the care service given, it is the food preparation and seasoning that's not to her satisfaction.

I also see signs of childishness. I do not think normal adults compare the sizes of pie, cake and other servings of food at the dinner table. She not only makes comparisons between hers and my servings but with those of people sitting around us. This is little kid stuff. It is embarrassing.

Another example: They built a new housing facility for low-income people where we live. When it was completed she asked me, "Why do these people get the new building and we have to live in the one built in 1942?"

I asked would she have felt better about it if they had built the building for the poor people out of old lumber? She didn't even catch onto my sarcastic remark.

I have to stop my criticism and sarcasm. This does neither of us any good. I know I can't make her over so any change has to come from within me.

I have tried to tell her happiness has to come from the inside. You are only as happy as you wish to be, but she can't see this. Once I threatened divorce but that really isn't an option. We need each other. I ask my Higher Power, our Great Spirit, for help. too.

Anna, what do you see for us in the future and do you have any suggestions?

Signed: Nothing But Negativity.

Dear Nothing But Negativity:

My heart goes out to you. I truly understand the impact of constant companionship with dissatisfaction. Miserable reactions and alignment with the "worst possible outcome" thinkers are very difficult to be around for very long.

Since you cannot see yourself separate from this woman, you have included in your life some very strong challenges to your own balance. Finding and keeping that balance is not impossible even in an imbalanced environment because internal balance is just that: internal.

Detachment from constant depressed statements, whining and comparisons that indicate a real fear-based understanding of the world isn't always easy but can be done. Here is what I recommend:

1. This one is hard: let go of judgment. How do you do that?

Well, I can only give you the tools I know about and use. I remember first that in my heart I have compassion for people that do not understand.

Then I remember in my heart that all people are equal in the eyes of the Creator.

Then I remember we are all related within the Creator by our life force, which is, after all, the Creator within each one of us.

Now, I accept that I have placed myself in the position I am in for my own highest good. This helps change my perspective of why am I here? It must be to learn something and grow stronger in my true representation as a "Spirit" walking in human clothes.

It helps remind me to be better. What do I have to learn from this person being in my life? What do I need to let go of?

Next, I have to let go of outcome. I cannot live within rules that are not in accordance with my soul and my alignment with the highest good. I cannot assume responsibility for someone else's understanding or path. I have to know they are all right within their own understanding, and that I don't have to constantly try to make them understand that life is good. This one is hard for me, because I know that people don't have to be miserable, they just choose to be miserable because it is an addiction to a certain way of thinking. The hard part is that I want to shake them to their very core so that they will quit their constant suffering, and learn to walk and live within a more graceful framework and then they can release the rest of us from their constant negative commentary.

I digress, because I am, in spirit, sitting with you at dinner and I want to shake this woman up too, and help her find a less aggravated way to be, but I can't do that and neither can you. So, barring that, we both have to just let her be and know that she is a loving being and love her in spite of her negative approach to life.

Can you do that? Yes, of course you can. I have had children that don't manage their lives well, dogs and cats that are scrappy, a sister who always knew everyone was against her, a mother who was afraid of her own shadow, a brother who is convinced the CIA is after him and that everything is about government plots, co-workers that constantly hated everything about their jobs, and other family members that constantly project misery. I love them anyway because that is just the way they are.

I can love, and so can you, suspending judgment, by just knowing that it is okay for them to be miserable. It is no reflection on me, and it is the path they enjoy the most. It is the one they feel the most comfort with and the one that motivates them to keep on living. The adrenaline rush from anger and distemprement provides enough aggravated energy to keep their interest and their hearts beating.

Use your humor. Inside of love you can find that. When she comments on the size of her piece of cake confirm that it must be a plot against her. Let her see you smile and you may help jolt her out of complainingville.

Another tool I use that helps in any situation where I find myself surrounded by negative energy is color. I "see" a beautiful green color around people. Sometimes I use blue, gold, or purple. This "seeing" (imaging), does somehow affect them. It mollifies them and even helps them to calm down. I found this out when I was in a grocery store line and the woman in front of me what giving the clerk a terrible time. I surrounded her with green and almost immediately she began to calm down. Try it, it works.

I also use breath. Before I speak and try and rip someones head off for their obvious lack of vision, I breath. In - very slowly, filling my lungs and pushing my stomach out filling up my entire body clear into my stomach with air.

Then I breath out - through my nose, very slowly, collapsing my stomach and pulling it towards my spine.

While I breath I say in my mind, Sat (pronounced saht) Nam (pounced like Viet Nam). This is related to Hindu and it is literally calling on the Truth of the Name or the Truth of God.

Allow this energy to relax you and to take you away from a critical focus.

Finally, remember, you can allow your mate to be negative and it won't affect you. It is okay for her to be that way.

It is okay for her to have that understanding.

It is okay for you to love someone who is that way.

Good Luck! You have quite a challenge for yourself. It is a path to higher understanding, acceptance, losing judgment, and finding compassion.

Aren't you amazed at what you have chosen for your life as another step in self realization? Blessings to you, my friend.

During her career in Pine Ridge, she married Clement Robert Brewer and they had seven children together, but suffered the loss of their first-born in infancy. In 1953, Clement and Esther had the opportunity to head southwest, so they packed up their six children and the family dog, Curly and moved to Los Angeles, Calif.

There Esther worked in the accounting dept of Douglas Aircraft in Torrance Calif. Before long she was presented with the chance to work for the U.S. Government again in northwest Arizona at the Bureau of Indian Affairs Truxton Canon Agency.

It seemed to fulfill her dream of settling in the Southwest, so on Feb. 14, 1954, the Brewer family fittingly relocated to Valentine, Ariz. There Esther and Clement lived and worked for 25 years. In 1979, Esther retired from BIA with 38 years of federal service. Clement also retired and they moved to Tucson, Ariz. where they lived out their days.

Esther was preceded in death by a son, Russell Charles in 1939 and her husband Clement in 1993; also both parents, a sister Frances Bell; brother James LaPointe Jr; brother William Bell; and grandson Anthony Mejia. She is survived by her six children, Margaret Mejia of Apple Valley Calif.; Lloyd Brewer of Phoenix Ariz.; Carmen Jacobs of Topeka Kan; Maureen (Jim) Scott of Eureka Calif.; Eileen Wilson and Jim (Ginger) Brewer of Tucson Ariz.; 22 grandchildren, 50 great-grandchildren, 14 great-great-grandchildren; and her loyal feline companions, Roar and Max.

Esther was fiercely proud of her Lakota heritage, and continually strove to instill that pride and knowledge of the culture in her children and grandchildren.

Esther Brewer's life was celebrated by loving family and friends on August 30, 2007, at Desert Sunset Funeral Home with interment at Holy Hope Cemetery in Tucson Ariz.

OST amends OSLH charter, implements 3 member board

New board gives Iron Cloud three year contract

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PRAIRIE WIND - On Wednesday, Sept. 12 at a special session of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council meeting at Prairie Wind Casino, the council voted 11-2 with two not voting to change the charter of the Oglala Sioux Lakota Housing to a three member governing board with staggered terms with a term limit of 12 years.

"We had to make a change or HUD would have suspended the funding for OSLH," said Jake Little, a first term council representative from Oglala/Whiteclay district, "we had too much political interference in housing and the current structure seemed to benefit too few people; as a council we have to look at a structure that will improve the organization of housing and benefit more families all across the reservation, we have such an incredible need for houses and a large responsibility to maintain the ones we have. I'm confident Paul Iron Cloud will succeed and get the job done."

The council first rescinded their earlier actions suspending the board, dropped the charges against the past board members and approved a new charter that was drafted by George Patton, tribal attorney and Jim Wagenlander, OSLH attorney. The new board approved by the council includes Taylor Little White Man (five year term), Emma Pinky Iron Plume Clifford (four year term) and Denise Mesteth (three year term). The board will be self appointing with the staggered terms. The motion for the change was made by Kathy Janis, Health and Human Services committee chair and seconded by Jake Little and those voting for it included Janis, Little, Jim Meeks, Kim Claussen, Cora Whiting, Ron Duke, Sonya Little Hawk Weston, Garfield Little Dog, Floyd Brings Plenty, Tom

Kyle based Tanka energy bar to be launched at Black Hills pow wow

KYLE - Following two years of intense product development, the young team behind the launch of Native American Natural Foods' new buffalo energy bar is getting a lot of help during the Tanka Bar's upcoming release celebration at the Black Hills Pow Wow, Oct. 5-7.

Native American Natural Foods has partnered with Rapid City's Rushmore Plaza Civic Center and the Black Hills Pow Wow Association to share its milestone with the community that has helped nurture the tiny company's big brand ambitions.

"We've been overwhelmed by everyone's generosity," said sales specialist and launch coordinator Jayson Brave Heart, 29. "Not only has the Black Hills Pow Wow Association endorsed Tanka Bars, they have donated booth space, incorporated the Tanka Bar brand into many of the activities, and have been unbelievably encouraging."

"The Rushmore Plaza Civic Center has been equally supportive," Brave Heart said. "Tanka Bar will be available in all the Civic Center concessions and Tanka Bar banners will be displayed at the Center for a year. We plan to

BIA agency notifies RST of intent to move agency office to Mission

ROSEBUD - In a regularly scheduled meeting today, Rosebud Sioux tribal President, Rodney M. Bordeaux notified the tribal membership that the Rosebud Bureau of Indian Affairs office in Rosebud recently sent a letter to RST notifying them that they will be moving their office to Mission. The September meeting of the RST council was aired over KINI FM radio.

In a 11 to 0 vote, the RST council passed a motion opposing the planned move. The motion directed the Rosebud BIA agency office to consolidate its services in Rosebud and construct joint office space with the Rosebud Sioux tribe and to seek resources to fund the project.

As the original headquarters of the Spotted Tail agency the town of Rosebud serves as a central location for services to the Sicangu Lakota oyate.

The outcome of this motion remains to be resolved.

Construction projects keep OLC moving ahead

PIYA WICONI - "Every time I see it, I get so excited," said Marilyn Kockrow, Oglala Lakota College's applied science department chair when she sees the 30X52 three bedroom, two bathroom house being constructed by OLC students, "we have never been able to build a house from scratch, it makes me feel good that students are involved in every aspect of the construction project."

The applied science department wrote a proposal to South Dakota Governor, Mike Rounds, for funds for a house kit that would provide skill development for students and provide a house for someone on Pine Ridge who needed a home. The governor awarded OLC $100,000 which included

Women honored with Kahtela ceremony

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY-Eight Dakota and Lakota women were honored at a Kahtela ceremony on Saturday, Sept. 15, reviving a tradition that had been kept hidden for generations.

Honored were Alice Four Horns of Rosebud; Maryjane Tiokasin, Delores Taken Alive, Imogene Taken Alive, and Ardyce Taken Alive of Standing Rock; Stella Pretty Sounding Flute of Crow Creek; and Evelyn Black Moon and Margaret Zephier of Yankton Sioux.

Four Horns, 87, was not able to attend, but the other women were present.

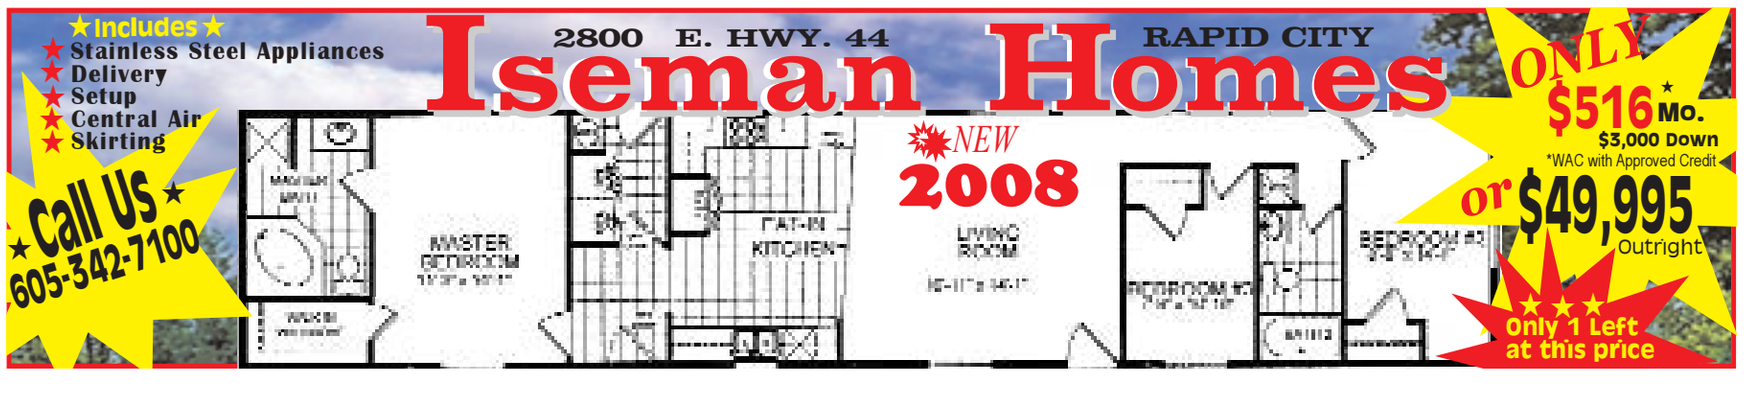
The women, inducted into the War Club Society, were chosen because "they exemplify what it means to be Kahtela," said Charmaine White Face, organizer of the 1851 Treaty Commemoration during which the ceremony was held.

The commemoration was sponsored by Teton Sioux Nation Treaty Council and Defenders of the Black Hills.

The women are all elders except Ardyce Taken Alive, who is under 50, White Face said.

Kahtela women are mothers, grandmothers, and role models; Kahtela tradition hearkens back to the time when Plains Indians were a matriarchal society and "it wasn't demeaning for a headman to go to [women] and say, 'What do you think?'" White Face said.

Receiving the war club gives the Kahtela the status to "go into any meeting, raise the club, and say 'I wish to speak,' and everything must come to a standstill," White Face said.



Eight women were inducted into Kahtela, or War Club Society, on Saturday, Sept. 15 in Rapid City. Shown here are Maryjane Tiokasin, Stella Pretty Sounding Flute, Evelyn Black Moon, Margaret Zephier, Delores Taken Alive, Imogene Taken Alive, and Ardyce Taken Alive. Not pictured is Alice Four Horns.

Most of the women have been active in the Teton Sioux Nation Treaty Council, and in 1999 some of them went together on a bus to Washington, D.C. to try to save the land along the Missouri River, White Face said. Conroy and Ella Jon Carlow; voting against was Don Garnier and Craig Dillon and not voting was Chuck Jacobs and Austin Watkins.

The board was originally suspended during the first week of July and on Friday was replaced by a new three member board; the old board included Sonny Ruff/LaCreek, Eleanor Charging Crow/Eagle Nest, Sandra Old Horse/Medicine root, James Cross/Pass Creek, Eileen Janis/Pine Ridge, Rhonda Two Eagle/Porcupine, Sandra Two Lance/Wakpamni, Valerie Kills Small Janis/Whiteclay and Garfield Apple/Wounded Knee.

On Friday, the new board hired Paul Iron Cloud on a three year contract with an option to extend. Iron Cloud has been serving as the interim director since the first week of July. Paul is a past tribal president and served as executive director of housing from 1992 until August of 2000.

"Getting housing back in shape will be a big job that won't happen overnight," said Iron Cloud from his corner office at the OSLH building in Pine Ridge, "we are going to stress following the policies and procedures that are in place, we are already working hard on a three year audit and currently we are only getting about a third of our rents, we need to improve that figure so we can do renovations on the houses that need it."

Rebecca Three Stars outside of her mutual help log home near Martin. Her original completion date was fall 2006. The roofing wasn't completed and water and snow damaged the inside wood work.

According to Iron Cloud, seven contractors expressed some interest in finishing the 27 units that are the log house home ownership project but only one, First Dakota out of Pierre submitted a bid. Some of the homes are close to being completed, some are only halfway finished and two or three will have to be constructed from the ground up.

FHP, an architectural firm, is looking at a cost analysis to complete the 52 Ellsworth units that have been languishing on jigs at the housing yard in Kyle. About 25 down payments have been received on the units and once a plan is put together, those units will move forward according to Iron Cloud; a partnership between the Empowerment Zone and Rural Development may oversee the remaining 27 units.

"The houses that we currently have and any new ones that we may acquire represent a valuable resource for the Oglala Sioux Tribe,"said Little, "a resource that we need to take better care of and in addition we need to do a much better job of finding new and creative ways of dealing with the huge demand for housing on Pine Ridge Reservation, it has to be a top priority of the tribe."

be taking a very active role in this community for a long time to come."

The Tanka Bar, already a household name on the Pine Ridge Reservation, has also won the endorsement of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association and several nutrition experts around the country. In addition, more than 100 of the nearly 1,500 members of the Tanka Bar's My Space, Bebo and Facebook networking sites have volunteered to work in "street teams" to help hand out product samples and spread the word during the pow wow. They have been dubbed "Team Tanka."

The Tanka Bar, which pairs prairie-raised American buffalo with Wisconsin cranberries, is a modern artisanal take on a traditional Native American recipe for "wasna" or "pemmican," which has been described by many nutritionists as the perfect energy food. The 100 percent natural bar is 70 calories per 1 ounce serving and no trans fats. According to Karlene Hunter, CEO of Native American Natural Foods, the Tanka Bar introduces a new product category: the meat-based energy bar. "Tanka Bars don't taste medicinal or like a candy bar," Hunter said.

"They are tender, flavorful and good for you. We're convinced that once people taste them, they'll choose pure meat protein-based energy over 'enhanced' cereal bars every time."

The choice of Rapid City and the pow wow as a forum for the Tanka Bar's launch was an easy one, according to Hunter. "We really wanted to find a way to celebrate this launch with the people who've supported us during the long, difficult development process," she said. "Creating a new product category has been a real challenge. Now we want to share our success with our community, friends and neighbors who have supported, advised and encouraged us in this journey. "

According to Brave Heart, the Tanka Bar will soon be hard to miss. "We plan to be visible everywhere in the city with seven large street teams during the weekend of our launch," he said. "We're thrilled so many of our friends and the community are stepping up to help us get this off the ground. We can use the support because it's going to be wild."

Native American Natural Foods, LLC, produces a family of nationally branded food products that are delicious and that promote a Native American way of wellness that feeds mind, body, and spirit.

hearings, the women are willing to be there.

"All of them keep up on everything" and are active politically as well as spiritually, White Face said. "They're not afraid to speak up for what they believe in," she said, but they do it firmly and gently, not in an aggressive manner that puts people off.

Vincent Brings Plenty, holy man from Pine Ridge, recited prayers and painted the women with red wase' at the corners of their eyes and the top of their heads, and White Face presented them with war clubs.

The ceremony was very emotional for the women, in part because Kahtela Societies were kept secret for generations.

"This society has been suppressed so badly, that most people don't even know about it," White Face said. Saturday's ceremony represented a revival after years of oppression, she said. "We were all crying."

White Face said she went through the Kahtela ceremony a couple of years ago in the Black Hills, but it was not public.

Teton Sioux Nation Treaty Council was established in 1893 by Chief He Dog specifically to keep alive treaty issues and look for resolution, White Face said. The council was formed at a time when it was dangerous for Natives to meet, so they most likely had to meet in secret, she said.

Today the treaty council holds meetings with Dakota and Lakota, still trying to get issues resolved.

White Face said the next meeting will be held Oct 11-12 at Prairie Knights Casino, north of Ft. Yates, N.D.

$55,000 for the house kit, $35,000 for a pickup, $9,000 for tools and $1,000 for instructor training. Students started building in March and the college is looking at mid October for the completion of the 1,580 square foot home that includes a master bedroom with a private bath and walk-in closet, two additional bedrooms with large closets, a utility room with a walk-in storage space and a kitchen with a walk-in pantry and an eating bar.

At the present time, the college is taking sealed bids for the house with a minimum bid of $55,000 which would cover the construction materials to build a second house. Bids are due by Oct. 15, appointments can be made to see the house by calling 455-6080 and the successful bidder will be responsible for having insurance before it is moved, provide for the moving, cost of foundation or basement materials and labor and plumbing hookup, sewer system, floor coverings and any additional costs after the house is sold. Those bidding need to be a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe and a resident of Pine Ridge Reservation.

Between 25-30 students from three vocational training programs at the college worked on the house during the spring and summer terms. Students were assisted by three instructors during the project, Marlin Fineran (electrical), Leonard Ferguson (HVAC) and Ed Haug (general construction). Haug retired in July and Lyle Wilson is the new general construction instructor.

Students who worked on the construction of the new house on the Piya Wiconi campus included: Milton Around Him, Lyle Blue Bird, Calvin and Karlan Crazy Bear, Robert Cordova, Franklin Ferguson, James Fire Thunder, Rocky Fraser, Stacy Garnette, George Hawk Wing, Michael Hernandez, Edwin and Eric Kills In Water, Joseph Little Dog, Beau Little White Man, Jolene Marshall, Frank Milk, Louis Pacer, Patrick Tallman, Adrian Trueblood, John White Dress, Frank Yellow Boy and Dustin Zimiga.

"Apparently the governor likes what we are doing, he funded a new proposal for $77,900 that will help us get a construction telescopic handler ($47,900), a building to store materials and a flatbed trailer to haul supplies," said Kockrow, "we're building a second jig on the yard at Piya Wiconi so if we make enough money from the first house we will be able to have two houses going at the same time."

In addition to the student construction project, the college has been involved in a number of major construction projects.

"With a just completed four classroom expansion in January, the He Sapa Center in Rapid City becomes the largest college center at OLC;" said Tom Shortbull, OLC president who has overseen the construction of a new college center in every district on Pine Ridge Reservation, the center in Rapid City, a new nursing building and new library over the last 10 years, "in June, the college completed the construction of the Veterans Monument that was constructed by OLC's Construction Program utilizing college students and funded by the US Department of Agriculture Tribal College and University Program with a match from OLC."

According to Shortbull, OLC will complete renovation of the Pine Ridge Head Start building, a building that was formerly the Shannon County elementary school and given to the tribe in the late 1960s to be used by the tribe for Headstart classes. The college used $1.2 million of a $1.5 million Title III grant for the renovation of the building that is home to nine headstart clasrooms. The remaining $300,000 will be used for the construction of a new Headstart building in the Wanblee community.

By the end of September, the college will also complete construction on a student dorm for college students in Pine Ridge.

"OLC was very successful this year in obtaining grants for new construction, receiving $1.6 million for a new student dorm in the Kyle community and a $600,000 TCUP-HUD grant for a new bookstore at Piya Wiconi," said Shortbull, "we are very appreciative of the Title III Department of Education and TCUP-Hud facilities grants in providing facility funding for OLC."

USDA Facility funding has allowed the college to complete the renovation, paving, and construction projects including the Veterans Monument, new siding for the Applied Science building; HVAC improvements for the main building at Piya Wiconi and paving at the Piya Wiconi campus including the parking lot for the lab building.

Miss Indian Nations shares insight into pageant success

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

Shere Wright, Sicangu, was selected Miss Indian Nations. Holding title has been a way to be heard.

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud reservation's very own, Shere Wright, was willing to share her insights as to what it is that motivated her to win the recent title of "Miss Indian Nations" at the annual United Tribes and Technical College powwow in Bismarck a couple of weekends ago.

At a time when many tribal nations are struggling to keep their language, culture and traditions alive, Shere has known the secret of keeping focused on a drug and alcohol-free lifestyle all along.

Her connection to family and community has kept her grounded in a traditional Lakota sense of belonging. "My parents raised me with strong values. They were very strict and had a lot of rules. I was encouraged to have my own opinion and to be able to state that made me strong" she said.

Wright has been in the spotlight for a relatively long time considering her young age as the list of her pageant successes is quite impressive and long. Her journey as royalty representing the Sicangu Lakota and the Rosebud reservation began with her Miss Indian Day title at St. Francis and continued in 1998 when she was chosen as Miss Teen Rosebud.

Later, she successfully competed for the title of Miss Rosebud on two different occasions and then, was chosen at Sinte Gleska University during Founder's Day as Miss Wikoskalaka.

Wright understands her role as an ambassador for Lakota people as she speaks to the youth and travels to different celebrations. She said, "I enjoy speaking because I have done it for so long. If someone wants me to speak it is a compliment."

She also was chosen for the very prestigious Miss He Sapa at the Black Hills powwow as well as holding the title of First Runner-Up in the Miss Indian World pageant in Albuquerque, N.M. several years ago. At the time, she was a student at Fort Lewis College in Durango, Colo.

Shere returned to the Rosebud and completed an Associate of Arts degree in business at SGU and has plans to complete her Bachelor of Science degree. She is committed to continuing her graduate degree in business and then, perhaps, make application to law school one day.

At a time when many colleges in the nation are looking to admit a diverse student population to learn tolerance and understanding from each other, the future looks very bright and the opportunities are there for Wright.

Her future plans include learning Lakota as well as operating her own school one day. She said, "A goal of mine is to come back here. I hope to one day open a school that is based on the Lakota language and culture."

Her concern about Lakota language survival is very evident as she noted, "I am afraid for the language. There are not many my age who know it. I'm trying to learn Lakota and I am relying on my mom, co-workers and Aunt Lila. Schools need to have a mandatory Lakota language course all the way through high school."

She admitted that holding such prestigious titles has been a way to be heard. "I care about the reservation and Native people. It has allowed me to be a voice for young people. It is hard for young people to be heard and having such title has allowed me to be heard."

Shere's parents are Lenard and Daisy Wright of Rosebud and both are quite active in public service to the community. Lenard previously served as a Rosebud Sioux tribal council representative from Rosebud community and currently serves at the Sergeant-At-Arms in the current RST administration with Rodney M. Bordeaux as Chairman. Daisy is a long time employee of the Rosebud Law Enforcement Services as a dispatcher.

Shere is employed as a secretary in the RST Revenue Department where she enjoys the support of coworkers as she ponders the future. She also said, "My mom and dad are very supportive and give me a lot of strength. There are a handful of young people who are strong advocates of the Lakota language and culture."

Steele, Chief Eagle leads Rez Runblerz in Ringwars 17

Hitman scores fastest knockout in Ringwars history

RAPID CITY - In the last Ringwars until March, undefeated welterweight Harry "The Hitman" Steele responded to a quick straight right to the nose with a vicious seven punch combination that ended with Dellwin Millhouse, a Spearfish fighter, unconscious face down on the canvas. The fight was ruled a knockout at the five second mark, the fastest knockout in the history of Ringwars.

The Pine Ridge Rez Rumblerz traveled to Rapid City to compete in the MMA competition, Ringwars 17, held at the Civic Center on Saturday, September 15. Three Rumblerz competed Saturday including Steele, Carl "Baby Face" Garnette at 140 lbs/featherweight and Chance "Popover" Chief Eagle in the heavyweight division.

Carl "Baby Face" Garnette battled against Chris Fuentes from Spearfish, a first fight for both competitors. Both fighters battled even in the first round but Fuentes took advantage of Garnette's attempted takedown and countered with a front guillotine choke which ended the match at 1:27 of the second round.

Chance "Popover" Chief Eagle was up next and originally matched up with Arlin Richards from Rapid City, he ended up fighting William Hollow Horn of Rapid City. The fight began with Popover landing a solid right cross on the jaw of Hollow Horn who then tried grappling with Popover but the Rez Rumbler applied a standing Guillotine choke which resulted in Hollow Horn tapping out at the 24 second mark of the first round.

The promoter of Ringwars, Matt DeWolfe, is currently looking into putting on a Ringwars on the reservation in the future. The Rez Rumblerz will not compete again until March of 2008. All of the Rez Rumblerz would like to say thanks to all of their sponsors and fans who continue to support them.

Our Views

Information sharing is a vital link

With the autumn season on our door step, the cooler temperatures bring sounds of high school football in the area and a change of color in the countryside. We finally get some relief from the summer heat.

For parents, students and the community this is an opportunity for professional development or conferences, a lot of which take place during the HeSapa Wacipi in early October and again during Lakota Nation Invitational in December.

Many of those meetings could be held locally in our own communities in order to keep the relatively large expense to a minimum and spent at home. For example, the Rosebud Casino and the Prairie Winds Casino, and Lakota Prairie Resort are able to accommodate a good number of people.

We understand, however, that many of the gatherings such as the South Dakota Association of Bi-lingual and Bi-Cultural Education and the Lakota Nation Invitational tournament have such a rich history of originating their purposes and goals in the hills and have focused their energy in bringing a large number of people together at once.

The companion side to that, however, is a desire for some schools to hold their trip expenses down and this might mean having to hold more locally sponsored meetings. After all, there are many who enjoy visiting the reservation as it is a place that holds the foundations of our belief and the memories of our ancestors. It is a place that is rich in cultural understanding.

Regardless, there is a responsibility attached to budgeting expenses to such annual meetings and it needs to be examined. If the level of expenditure cannot be held to a minimum, then maybe there needs to be a greater effort devoted to bringing home that information and sharing with those who did not attend.

Information sharing is such a vital link between people, tribes, communities and agencies and sometimes the only way to get the word out on important initiatives is through word of mouth or by actually debriefing others on our experience and that means people to people contact.

In other words, we need to share information we learn or put it to use when we go out and attend the workshops, conferences and meetings, it could strengthen our nation.

Alcoholics Anonymous: my story

Wanblii Ake Glii

"My name is Anson and I am an Alcoholic," is the phrase I have been saying since I was about 17. Now that I am sober almost four years, I can look back on my life and see I have always lived in fear and confusion. I realize now only when I was ready to look at my self and begin to understand my feelings, would I ever stop drinking. It took me eight years to finally get honest and admit to myself and everyone else I was powerless over alcohol and I couldn't control my life.

This is my story put in word form or as they say in the rooms of Alcoholics Anonymous, "This is how it was, what it was like and how it is now."

I have broken pieces of memory being a little kid in a small reservation town. It was a forgotten town to the white world, but it was the home of my people. It was a town of poverty and alcoholism was in almost every family.

Violence and abuse happened often and dysfunction was seen in the children because I remember many of the kids chewed tobacco and talked about sex a lot in elementary school and a few would huff gasoline after school was out.

I still remember the first time I smelled the sweet and bitter stink of alcohol. There are also some memories my mind suppressed and I have never been able to recall them. But I know they had an effect on me for a long time.

My family eventually moved away and I never did know why. We moved to a white town and that is when things started to change for me. Growing up I always felt different and less than the other white kids.

I didn't know why at the time and I couldn't have guessed either. All I knew was I had memories of another place where I didn't feel so different, but now I did. And I didn't know who I was or where I came from and this left me feeling empty.

Looking back now it seems I was destined to be an alcoholic because I remember this constant feeling of self hate and insecurity through all my years. I didn't know it, but I was searching for the answer to the question that was always inside me. Who am I? A question I didn't know how to ask, but the desire to know who I was, in time, led me to alcohol. And alcohol gave me the greatest feelings I had ever known. They are feelings I won't try and describe for you because if you've ever been drunk you know what I am talking about.

But I remember telling myself," This is all I need and all I ever want to do."

It was only a matter of time before my addiction brought me thousands of dollars in fines and hundreds of hours of community service. I experienced the authorities always having control of me from putting me on standard probation to house arrest. And in my unending thirst for alcohol and my resistive behavior they threw me from county jails to state prisons. I hurt my mom, dad, brother and sister in ways I will never know. I faced death quite a few times and almost lost my mind too.

It was eight years of a sick cycle telling my self and others I'm never going to drink again, then either happy or sad I drank again. And all those feelings of self pity and negativity came flooding back and it was enough to make me lose hope.

Towards the end of my drinking I never had so many bad and twisted dreams, dreams of a dark way filled with everything negative imaginable. I don't know what finally helped me to stop drinking.

Maybe it was all the prayers my mom and dad said for me when I was out running around crazy; or all the ceremonies where I prayed for pity and asked to be shown a better way; or one of my prayers being answered from the countless times I had prayed alone in the night crying for help.

Maybe it was all of them, whatever the case, I was sick and tired of being sick and tired, and I finally got it in the rooms of Alcoholics Anonymous.

When I was younger I used to go with my dad to A.A. sometimes because he got sober there long ago too, so I knew about the program. I remember telling myself when I first started drinking that if things got too bad for me I would just go to A.A. and I would stop.

I found out it's not that easy, but it doesn't have to take a person eight years to get sober, how long is really up to you. A person can find sobriety the first time they walk into the rooms of A.A. if they want. It all depends if he/she is truly ready to give up drinking, if there is any doubt left in a person that he/she still wants to drink one day they may not stay sober.

And I say "may not stay sober" because I have known people who had the desire and craving to drink for years, but they never drank and they stayed sober because they wanted to. It is a spiritual program that is based on your relationship with your higher power, and who you choose to call your creator is your choice to make.

If a person believes in a higher power; truly wants to get sober; is ready to be 100 percent honest with themselves and others; and is willing to go to any lengths for sobriety, they will find it.

I tried to get sober by walking the traditional way through prayer and all kinds of ceremony hoping to get sober instantly, but instead those powers led me to the rooms of A.A.

When I first started trying to get sober I remember thinking, "If I can't find sobriety here I will look for it in the traditional way." And in all my searching to quit drinking I came across a Native author who said something like, "Alcohol is a white mans disease, you need to fix yourself how he would do it." I later came to understand that our traditional ways can help our people for a lot of different sicknesses, but when it comes to alcohol and drugs or other diseases like diabetes (which the traditional way never dealt with before the Europeans came) it might be best to take a different approach to the

Lakota Nation has prevailed before and we can do it again

Dear Editor:

I am writing to the local indigenous people that live on the Cheyenne River Sioux Reservation. A reserved area of limited conditions for whom individuals were chosen to lead, create and develop a better life style for the members designated to live here.

So far our better life style has become a multimillion dollar debt that only a handful of people received profit from. Conditions in the communities continue to worsen as they have become invisible to our so called leaders.

The reservations were created by a non Indian government so that the Lakota people would become genocidal and that we would eventually disappear.

Well my belief is we are now at that point. Our children have no shame, respect for each other as well as themselves. The unemployed sell drugs so that they and their families can live halfway decent. Our sacred children are being exposed to all the drugs that are being handled by the adults. Drug inhaled by our sacred children will effect them in their adult years. The tribe will become a village of idiots that are unable to learn. The few that are able to learn will not care because they have already been taught to think as the non Indian.

Our sacred children don't even know that the Lakota Nation was the only Nation to have defeated the United States Army. They have not been taught the Lakota Culture, so the think they are wasi'su a culture the Indian worship. In the Riggs Dakota-English Dictionary it says "It is said that this word is nearly synonymous with "wakan" (The English translation for Wakan is God). The Indian Language does not teach the Lakota Culture. As a matter of fact when I was in elementary, we were taught the Indians were savages, wagon burners, prairie nigers, things not to be proud of. It is my opinion that the culture has vanished and the Lakota people are now Indians without a culture trying to be of a different nationality, a black, white, mexican or possibly an outsider.

The Constitution and By Laws that we live by on the Cheyenne River Reservation are of dual standard. Tribal Officials, Police Officers, Prosecutors, Public Defends, Court Clerks and other persons with authority select ordinances and policies they chose to enforce according to who you are and how they are feeling at that moment.

Nepotism is visible in all aspects of our government, in the Judicial Department alone there is a judge, public defender, clerk of courts and police officer all of the same family.

Tribal official use government money obligated to be used to better reservation life to invest and buy private real estate that is eventually sold back to the tribe at two to three times the amount initially invested.

Convicted felons are hired to serve the public as if they are being praised for violating someone or something or could have it been the law? I've heard children announce in public places "my dad, mom, uncle, aunt, sister or brother " are in jail or prison not knowing that situation is nothing to be proud of. Persons seen destroying property that does not belong to them are not being punished or made to replace ruined items. Children that see this kind of adult behavior learn they also can do this without penalty of any kind.

Public Officials do not publish their phone numbers and the ones that do answer their phones hang up before greeting the caller. I was not aware our elected tribal officials were only available to serve the people a limited amount of hours per week for council and committee meetings. Can it be that self advancement is the main political motive of our tribal politicians?

I'm treated as if I had walked into someone private home whenever I enter any office and backs are turned as if to say "This is my place leave me alone". Tribal employees need to realize that they are getting paid to help those of us that are not so fortunate to have an income and give us the respect that we deserve. Sure I'm rude, but one can be mistreated for only so long before striking back.

Last week the BIA Education Department had a workshop for their faculty on "Poverty". After decades of having lived a poor quality of life, we are being taught how to live with deprivation? Or is it the wealthy that are learning how to deal with the underprivileged?

Perhaps the answer to our problem would be to abolish our tribal government, close the offices and let Federal Headquarters distribute an equal per capita to individuals of this federally recognized tribe.

I do not have a solution for our situation, but more concerned members need to become involved so that maybe the Lakota people can overcome these existing conditions and survive.

The Lakota Nation has prevailed before and we can do it again.

I am a Lakota member.

Northern Perspectives

The language that is not used for profanity or in anger

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

There are many platforms upon which many of us will stand throughout our journey and it is has been especially admirable when Lakota people step up and put forth their knowledge of Lakota. Local Sicangu people like Lionel Bordeaux, Webster Two Hawk, Sr. and Albert White Hat, to name a few have been very articulate when utilizing Lakota to speak to the people. The late John Around Him and Calvin Jumping Bull were wonderful speakers and are missed today when public gatherings take place.

It is especially difficult for one to be able to switch back and forth from English to Lakota and vice-versa and researchers say that that ability is the indicator of someone who is a good problem-solver.

I recall being at the SGU multipurpose building last year when Sen. Tim Johnson visited and Lionel was asked rather spontaneously to speak to the people about the upcoming election. He did a great job in explaining in Lakota the need to vote and what it would mean to Sicangu people and to the senator.

I remember a meeting of the Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce when John Around Him was the emcee. I was just getting to know about John and I was tickled when he chose to tell so many Rosebud jokes. I vowed that we might get him back when he came to Sicangu country, but we never did. I think it was enough that we enjoyed experiencing the humor along with him as he was well respected over here.

I was quite impressed as it is a skill that I am hoping to perfect very soon. At this point, I will occasionally write down a short speech and read it in Lakota and that works fine for now. In the future, however, there will be a need to be more explanatory and descriptive and that is where more work is needed.

I understand that unease and anxiety many people experience when it comes to using Lakota in formal and informal settings as I have been through them. As I have used Lakota to the extent that I know how, I am continually checking the reaction that I get from those listening. I suspect that most people also do that. I will also examine the interpersonal dynamics of the people involved in the conversation and who might be listening.

Using any form of speech involves paying attention to those kinds of dynamics so that our efforts to perfect Lakota are always moving toward a positive end. Many times I hear people who say that they are afraid of being chastised if they make a mistake and I fully comprehend that fear as I have been quietly teased if I happen to make a mistake.

I like to monitor the reaction of people when they might hear a Lakota person of mixed descent speak Lakota. Most people are of mixed heritage anyway these days so the important issue here is whether or not they support the maintenance of Lakota as a viable indicator of a very unique and enduring culture that is fighting to stay intact. I know that I have felt a certain bias in my emotional response when hearing a white man speaking Lakota. Understanding that response within myself, then, I understand that a full-blood Lakota might react with the same disdain upon hearing me.

All of the those considerations contribute to making Lakota language preservation and acquisition an even more difficult task and all of us that contribute to that end need to continue to work together. Our children also face the same issues that we face when learning Lakota and as teachers, we need to pay attention to those issues.

I recall a couple of years ago when Ron His Horse Is Thunder at Standing Rock said that he would make a concerted effort to learn basic Lakota during his administration. I thought that was a very good way to draw attention to the importance of Lakota and give recognition that it is something that can be accomplished in a given time frame.

The platform we stand on is often more important than we realize and for those who promote Lakota language learning among their other interests is someone who cares about the survival of the Lakota nation. I need to give recognition to Archie Little, Jesse Bear, Francis White Bird and others who have taught me in their own individual way about Lakota. I appreciate Jesse as he will talk Lakota to me and never interject an English word as a way of teaching me and it is fun.

I know that when Lakota is spoken, those who might be listening become kinder and gentler as they say it is a language that is not used for profanity or in anger.

Dr. Archie Beauvais, (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and currently works as the director of the Lakota language preservation project for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

Notes From Indian Country

Whatever happened to the so-called Goons?

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Last year I attended the funeral of my cousin and classmate Frederick "Budger" Brewer on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. Like so many citizens of the reservation, Budger was labeled as a Goon by the members of the American Indian Movement although, again like so many, his feelings were pretty neutral.

But that is the way it was in 1973. If you weren't for AIM you were a Goon because the organization allowed no room for neutrality. This is the way it was during the 1970s and I recall wearing both labels at one time. While hosting a television show for KEVN-TV in Rapid City I had members of AIM on my weekly show and I was labeled as a member of AIM. Shortly thereafter I had people from the office of the President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Dick Wilson, on my show and I was labeled as a Goon.

Budger Brewer went on to build the first cable television system on the Pine Ridge Reservation. When I lived at Pine Ridge in the 1970s we renewed our friendship and often had a cup of coffee and conversation at my newspaper the Lakota Times. Budger said something that I have heard many times over the years. He said, "When I first heard about AIM and the things they were doing in Minneapolis, you know things like following the police around at night to make sure they weren't harassing Indians, I had a lot of respect for them."

I have heard that same comment from my fellow Lakota many times over the years. I am led to believe that it was when AIM invaded the sovereign nation of the Pine Ridge Reservation at Wounded Knee and turned on their fellow Indian brothers and sisters that many Lakota backed away from them. And when they occupied the Fairchild Plant on the Navajo Nation causing that company to close the plant costing the Navajo people nearly 400 badly needed jobs, that further caused disillusionment.

Some members of AIM also have the tendency to say outlandish things with no regard for the truth. Still on the Internet is a letter by Leonard Peltier attacking me that is filled with untruths, but it will be there forever. Peltier said that when I ran for the vice presidency of the Oglala Sioux Tribe in 1983 that I barely received a few votes.

The truth is I was the top vote getter in the primary election against current OST President John Steele (he was the incumbent vice president in 1983) and I lost to him in the General Election by only 90 votes out of the several thousand that were cast. That information was readily available if it was the truth Peltier was seeking.

There were only about 21 Lakota that occupied Wounded Knee. The rest were Indians from other tribes or non-Indians. When the occupation ended most of them left the reservation and scattered in all directions many ending up in jail or prison.

It has bothered me for many years that the mainstream media labeled too many people of Pine Ridge as Goons. Those so-called Goons lived and died on the reservation they loved. They stayed and helped to rebuild the bridge between AIM and themselves. They were carpenters, plumbers, electricians, teachers, school superintendents, members of the tribal council, tribal presidents, social workers, alcohol and drug counselors, and business owners, but most of all they were decent human beings given an unfair label by the MSM simply because it was colorful.

One day several years ago as I was working at my newspaper Indian Country Today, I got a call from a member of the Dick Wilson family. When I answered the call I was told that Dick was at the Rapid City Regional Hospital and was near death. The caller said Dick wanted to see me.

I rushed to the hospital. His family was gathered around him. Dick saw me and motioned me to come closer. He was very weak and near death and he spoke so softly that I had to lean down very close in order to hear him. He said, "Tim, when you write about me in your newspaper just say that everything I did in my life was for my people. I did what I thought was right."

Dick Wilson died that day and I wrote his final words to me in his obituary. He was caught in a time and place in history that will forever disparage him, but I have never met a friend of his or a member of his family that did not defend him and did not continue to love him.

When the true story of the occupation of Wounded Knee is finally told, there will be villains and heroes on both sides of the spectrum.

There will be some good and some bad that comes from it, and I hope that the Lakota attribute of forgiveness helps to heal the wounds that have haunted the people of the Pine Ridge Reservation for far too many years.

Finding My Voice

I wish we had our own memorial for Crazy Horse

Dana Badmilk

On September 5th, 1877, that Chief Crazy Horse was murdered at Fort Robinson, Nebraska.

I went to the site where they killed him when the Brits were here.

It was my idea really to go there because of the fact that he died there and I hadn't been there since I went on a field trip in the 4th grade and all I remember from that field trip was trying to ditch our teacher.

I was disappointed when we arrived. Really, I don't know why.

I guess because when you go into this land, about an hour out there is a big, huge sign outside of Chadron that says Land Of Crazy Horse and they advertise on this billboard-a fur museum, the state park and Fort Robinson park. Then you get there and there are signs for ho downs, chuck wagon suppers, and kayaking, and little cabins for corny families to rent and feel like they live in the old west.

Then there is an old general store with penny candy, tobacco in pouches, lemonade and everything else there is to make the Smith's, the Roger's, and the Hockenbock's feel like they are real pioneers.

So that is why I was disappointed. I just tried to imagine if anywhere else in America, where someone that was such a great leader to their people, had been murdered, if it was a tourist trap…anywhere else? I don't know.

Then there are reconstructed barracks of the actual soldiers and the reconstructed jail where they kept the hostile Indians who really were not hostile.

Okay, they were, but they were fighting for their land. They wanted to live in the days where they were rich in natural resources and were free to roam and speak their language. They were fighting for a life they loved.

Crazy Horse was one of them. Crazy Horse fought for this way of life until he was killed and stabbed in the back.

This is why he is iconic to us.

This is why we don't forget him. He is our hero.

So in a way I was disappointed when I seen the pile of rocks with the plaque on it, in the middle of the hoopla that depicted the spot he died. I offered tobacco to this spot.

I felt humbled to walk on the ground he once also walked on. I am thankful he is not buried there and nobody can make money on his grave. I am thankful nobody knows where his final resting spot is. I am thankful to be of his people.

I wish we had our own memorial for this great leader.

Like he said..."When you see the Black Hills remember me. "

Well I can't see the Black Hills from the reservation that he fought to keep us off of, but on the day of his death, I remembered our great leader.

healing process.

I am not saying it is impossible for anyone to find healing from a European caused disease in the traditional way, because I believe all things are possible through Wakan Tanka. This was just my road that I was shown to sobriety and the traditional way.

What it's like now for me is I can look back and see I was a little boy wandering in a white world.

A world that had pushed my people to the outside of their cities and never told me why my people were living the way they were, a world that had done it's best to forget my people and has made me to be who I am today. I can look back now and see I was blinded all my life.

I was a pitiful person who wasn't living, but was instead slowly dying because I was killing myself a little bit at a time. I was lost in the illusions of the dominant society trying to find myself in their world and all it ever brought me was confusion and fear.

Now today, just this one day, I am no longer a slave to alcohol and I am doing my best to be a servant for my people.

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

HOT SPRINGS - Little Wound's Josh Mousseau, a senior, finished Monday's Region 4A at the Southern Hills Golf Course in Hot Springs with an 81, good for second place and a trip to State for the fourth straight year. Red Cloud's Mike Twiss scored an 82 and a tie for fourth for his second straight trip to the State A golf tournament.

This year the top 24 individuals qualified for State out of the 43 golfers participating on the nine teams entered in the Region 4A tournament. Kyle Lewis, Hot Springs, took first with an 80, Tyler Burr of Belle Fourche was third with an 81 and Casey Whitney of Custer was fifth with an 82. Other local qualifiers included: Joe Keith/Pine Ridge 21st with a 94, Montana Sierra/Red Cloud 22nd with 96 and Eric Long/Pine Ridge in 24th with 97.

Belle Fourche took the Region 4A team title with a 343, Hot Springs was one stroke back with 344 while Custer was third with 348 and Lead-Deadwood was fourth with 369. Red Cloud was sixth with 401, Little Wound was seventh 444 and Pine Ridge was eighth with 460.

Josh Mousseau, finished with an 81 at the Southern Hills Golf Course. Josh was a part of the International Space School in Houston this summer and participated in NASA related activities.

Red Cloud's team included Twiss 82, Sierra 96, Geoffrey Black Feather 100 and Lyle Jack 123; Little Wound included Mousseau 81, Michael Lays Bad 99, Jeremy White and D. Whirlwind Horse 132 and Pine Ridge's team Keith 94, Long 97, Orie Brown 111, Bruce Jacobs 158 and Stephen Ross 181.

Another freshman, Alex Prue from Todd County finished in a tie for 64th with 96, 96 and a 192.

Little Wound rides Hornbeck to Crow Creek win

STEPHAN - Kevin Hunter was recuperating from a spider bite and the line was missing Enoch Yellow Hawk and Anthony Tall Man but Little Wound's senior wide receiver and defensive back, Brice Hornbeck stepped it up in the pinch, hustling over the goal line from five yards out for the Mustangs first score then pulling down a Vilas Fallis pass for an interception and following that up with a 78 yard pass reception for a touchdown from Jeremy Red Cloud to fire up his Little Wound teammates in their 24-6 win over Crow Creek Friday in Stephan.

"We just came out so flat at Crow Creek, said Darrel Hunter, Little Wound head coach, "I don't know what it was, whether they went in there and thought they would blow them out or what; I did have a chance to play everyone and in the second half I kept running subs in to give everyone a chance to play."

Little Wound and Crow Creek both sputtered through the first quarter, neither team putting any points on the board. The Mustangs scored all of their points in the second quarter; in addition to Hornbeck's productivity, Little Wound used a Brett Thunder Hawk four yard run to give them an 18-0 lead and followed it up with a seven yard TD run by Jacey Mesteth to wrap up their scoring, every two point conversion failed.

Larry Gayton's second interception of the game set up Crow Creek's only score as Fallis raced over from the six for the touchdown, the run for two failed.

For the Mustangs, Hornbeck finished with three receptions for 110 yards and a TD, three rushes for four yards and a TD and an interception on defense, Mesteth ran nine times for 56 yards and a TD, Brennon Montgomery carried the ball five times for 28 yards with one 34 yard catch and Jeremy Red Cloud was four for eight passing for 144 yards, one TD and one interception. Gayton had five catches for 70 yards and two interceptions on defense, Fallis was eight of 22 for 121 yards and one rushing touchdown while Kelvin Kirkie ran six times for 18 yards.

"We have to do better on offense and if we get down, we cannot quit," said Hunter looking ahead to Friday's game with Todd County in Mission, "we need to do a better job of getting the ball to Brice, using his experience and competitive nature and the defense is going to have to be ready to play to deal with the Falcons balanced offense behind Gunner Krogman and CJ Spotted Tail."

Little Wound is 3-0 and travels to Todd County on Friday, Crow Creek is 0-3 and hosts Miller Area on Friday.

Falcons grounded by Custer Wildcats

CUSTER - "We just couldn't get the job done deep in Custer territory," said Bob Kornely, Todd County Falcons head coach after his team's first loss of the season 20-6 to Custer Friday night in Custer. "we had three drives into their red zone and scored only once, we're a better team than that and we need to learn from this game."

Custer went up 14-0 in the first half but the Falcons came out storming in the second half and drove to the Wildcat six yard line before stalling and turning the ball over on downs. After forcing a Custer punt, Todd County drove 63 yards for their only score of the game, a four yard pass from CJ Spotted Tail to Jaden Allen that closed the gap between the two teams to 14-6 with 7:48 to go in the fourth quarter.

After Custer's Matt Kostalecky missed a 40 yard field goal, Todd County had two minutes to drive down the field for a chance to tie it up. Darin Smith, a junior linebacker for Custer, picked off a Spotted Tail pass at the Wildcat 47 yard line and ran it back for a touchdown that sealed the win for Custer.

Gunner Krogman carried the ball 19 times for 99 yards, Mike Neiss had eight carries for 37 yards while Spotted Tail was 12 of 19 for 99 yards, one touchdown and two interceptions. Todd County hosts Little Wound Friday night while Custer hosts Hot Springs for their 2007 Homecoming.

Red Cloud runs over St. Francis 48-6

Scott runs for 113 yards, scores 24 points

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - Red Cloud's Billy Scott, a 175 pound senior running back, rumbled down the field for a 41 yard touchdown score, followed it with a 63 yard punt return for a touchdown that showed a great sense of timing and creative use of his blockers and eased over the goal line from four yards out to help the Crusaders to a 24-0 lead just four seconds into the second quarter on the way to Red Cloud's 48-6 win over the Warriors Friday night in St. Francis.

"We put together a solid game and had a chance to play a lot of players," said Keith Ferguson, first year Red Cloud football coach, "our ground game rolled up and down the field but we still need to work on a balanced attack, mixing in passes with our strong running game."

Following Scott's hot start which included a 78 yard TD run from the line of scrimmage called back by a penalty, Carl Swallow, a sophomore tailback, scored on runs of one and four yards and Mike Cuny sandwiched a five yard TD pass from Jeremy Blacksmith between Swallow's TD's. Red Cloud scored six touchdowns and made good on each of the two point conversion attempts; Dustin Brewer ran the first two in, Scott ran two in and caught a Blacksmith pass for the third conversion and Swallow ran one conversion in after his second score.

Red Cloud used the bench throughout the second half. Earl Peneaux hit Michael Farmer on a 31 yard scoring strike late in the fourth quarter to get St. Francis on the board. Peneaux finished with eight completions out of 16 passes attempted with one TD, Kotey Arcoren ran eight times for 45 yards.

"We have won two in a row but we have to work at improving some each game," said Ferguson, "we have homecoming this week against Eagle Butte - they run and pass well and our defense needs to be up to the task."

Scott finished with 10 carries for 113 yards and two touchdowns with three two point conversions and a punt return for a TD; Swallow had five carries for 43 yards and two scores and a two point conversion; Dominic LeBeau, a freshman had nine carries for 56 yards while Blacksmith was four of five in the air for 42 yards and one touchdown and one two point conversion.

Red Cloud is now 2-1 and hosts Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Friday for their 2007 Homecoming while St. Francis is 0-3 and hosts Hill City Friday night.

Wounded Knee District School plan for restructuring, public meeting to be held

WOUNDED KNEE - The Wounded Knee District School will be holding a public meeting at 4 p.m. Sept. 20, at Manderson in the Wounded Knee District School Gym to seek input and help to decide upon a restructuring option best suited for the students.

Parents were sent a letter on Sept. 4, 2007 by Marnee White Wolf, the principal of Wounded Knee School, informing them the school must complete a restructuring plan for the 2007-2008 school year, as it has been in restructuring status for a number of years. This occurs when a school fails to make Adequate Yearly Progress as a result of low standardized test scores in language arts/reading and mathematics; low student attendance in grades K-8; low graduation rates in grades 9-12.

Adequate Yearly Progress is the progress needed each year to have all children proficient and advanced by the year 2014 according to Public Law 107-110, the No Child Left Behind Act. Parents, students, staff, school board members, community entities are invited as well as the Bureau of Indian Affairs, to work together to create this plan.

There are five options available for consideration in the restructuring plan, two of which are most practical:

(i) Reopening the school as a public charter school. (not an option)

(ii) Replacing all or most of the school staff (which may include the principal) who are relevant to the failure to make adequate yearly progress.

(iii) Entering in a contract with an entity, such as a private management company, with demonstrated record of effectiveness, to operate the public school. (not an option)

(iv) Turning the operation of the school over to the State education agency, if permitted under state law and agreed to by the State. (not an option) and

(v) Any other major restructuring of the school's governance arrangement that makes fundamental reforms, such as significant changes in the school's staffing or governance, to improve student academic achievement in the school and that has substantial promise of enabling the school to make adequate yearly progress as defined in the state plan..

Anyone with questions or concerns regarding the proposed restructuring plan may contact the principal, Marnee White Wolf at 605-455-6350.

Indian health care bill advances

WASHINGTON (AP) - Legislation that would boost Indian health care has been approved by two Senate panels.

The Senate Finance Committee approved legislation Wednesday that would provide an additional $52 million for American Indians who use programs such as Medicare, Medicaid, and the Children's Health Insurance Program.

The bill would simplify how those programs pay Indian health providers. The legislation also aims to boost outreach and enrollment in some of those programs and protect Indian health providers from discrimination.

Democratic Senator Max Baucus of Montana, chairman of the finance panel, says Indians ``shouldn't have to fight for what's rightfully theirs.''

ROSEBUD (AP) - The Rosebud Sioux Tribe announced last Thursday that $4 million was included for the Advanced Electronics Rosebud Integration Center in the U.S. Senate's Fiscal Year 2008 Defense Appropriations bill.

The bill was passed by the full Senate Sept. 12, 2007.

"These funds will be used to advance the effort to establish a Native American advanced electronics technology center that will further state-of-the-art space and missile system electronics," said Rosebud Sioux Tribe's President Rodney M. Bordeaux.

Rosebud Economic Development Corporation, a Rosebud Sioux Tribal- owned business, is conducting this effort jointly with Radiance Technologies.

The U.S. Army's Space and Missile Defense Technical Center's office is providing oversight for the Center.

The primary focus of this program continues to advance the state-of-the-art in space and missile defense system electronics by reducing the size, weight, and cost of electronic circuit cards and components, wire harnesses, and electronic cabling with special emphasis to reducing hazardous substances and materials to include employing lead-free components in micro-electronic products.

"We are pleased the Senate included these critical funds in its bill and we applaud Senator Johnson for his work in securing $4 million in a very challenging fiscal environment," Bordeaux added. "The Tribe will continue to work closely with our delegation to ensure this funding level is maintained throughout conference negotiations." Senator Thune also supported the funding request.

Bordeaux also congratulated Sen. Johnson on his return to the Senate after months of therapy to recover from a life-threatening brain hemorrhage and offered the Tribe's best wishes as he continues the recovery process.

The House of Representatives passed its bill August 5, 2007. Although Rep., Stephanie Herseth Sandlin, D-S.D., submitted a similar funding request, the House bill does not contain funding for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's project. The two bills will be reconciled, and a final one will be considered by each chamber.

State high court rules tribe has no jurisdiction over father, child

ICWA doesn't apply in the case, justices ruled

By Joe Kafka
Associated Press

PIERRE - The South Dakota Supreme Court ruled Thursday that the Sisseton-Wahpeton tribal court has no jurisdiction over a non-Native American father or his daughter, reversing an earlier ruling by a state judge who said the tribe could remove the girl from her father's custody.

The tribal court issued the order for enforcement in state court against Daniel John Carlson of Sisseton after he forgot a younger daughter all day in a parked car, and she died of overheating on Aug. 17, 2005.

A state prosecutor, deciding that Carlson did not intentionally leave Tehya, who was 14 months old, in his car when he went to his job as vice president of a telemarketing firm in Browns Valley, Minn., refused to charge him. Carlson had left his then-6-year-old daughter, Jacinda, at his mother's home in Sisseton but forgot to drop Tehya off at her day-care provider

Carlson's ex-wife, Barbara Baldwin, is a Native American and an enrolled member of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Tribe. She filed an abuse and neglect complaint in tribal court to gain protective custody of their older daughter; both girls also were enrolled tribal members.

After gaining the tribal court order, the Sisseton-Wahpeton Child Protection Program went to state circuit court for enforcement against Carlson. Carlson argued that the tribal court had no jurisdiction to issue the removal order, but Circuit Judge Scott Myren disagreed with him.

Myren said the Indian Child Welfare Act gave the tribe jurisdiction. ICWA was passed by Congress in 1978 to regulate the placement of Native American children, with the goal of strengthening Native American families and culture.

Overturning Myren 4-1, the state Supreme Court said the tribal court lacked jurisdiction because ICWA does not apply to Carlson or his oldest daughter. Jacinda is not a ward of the tribal court because she did not live on the reservation, and Sisseton is not on the reservation, either, the justices said.

The former Lake Traverse Reservation was diminished in 1975, resulting in a checkerboard of jurisdiction and giving state courts jurisdiction over nontribal lands within the 1867 reservation borders, the high court noted. Sisseton is not within tribal jurisdiction, the justices added.

One of the attorneys representing Carlson was Bill Janklow, the former governor and congressman who temporarily lost his law license after a 2003 conviction of second-degree manslaughter for causing a fatal traffic crash in Moody County. The case marked Janklow's return to the legal profession, and his appearance before the Supreme Court on behalf of Carlson a year ago drew intense media interest.

Movie Imprint brings familiar environment to screen

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY- Audiences at the Friday, Sept. 14 premiere of Imprint laughed when they recognized local faces and places, and because the movie was filmed entirely in western South Dakota, there was much in the movie that was familiar.

One image that drew a laugh was the Pennington County Courthouse, with the legend "Denver, Colorado" on the screen. That exterior scene and interior scenes shot inside the old courthouse in Custer were used to depict a courthouse in Denver, where a murder trial was wrapping up.

Audiences saw the grassy prairie and Badlands of the Pine Ridge Reservation, filmed when the sun was low on the horizon and long, golden light washed over the land. And they saw most of the action take place in a house located on the 777 Ranch, south of Rapid City.

Audiences saw faces of people who live here. Some were extras in group scenes such as the trial in "Denver" or the birthday party for Sam Stonefeather; some had starring roles, such as Charlie White Buffalo, an Oglala Lakota College instructor living at Manderson, who played the role of Sam.

What was unfamiliar to local audiences was the premiere itself, with stretch limos pulling up to the curb and actors and production people climbing out and walking the red carpet.

The premiere was held in Rapid City on Friday and in Kyle on Saturday because the movie was filmed near those locations and was created by Linn Productions, a Rapid City business, and produced by Chris Eyre, a Black Hills resident.

The movie was shown in three theaters at Carmike Cinemas, and afterward ticket holders were invited to a party at the Ramkota. Eyre said each theater held about 400 people, so close to 1,200 people attended.

Imprint is billed as a supernatural thriller, and according to Carolyn Linn of Linn Productions, it was originally written about a white family living on the prairie. But Eyre had previously worked with a Native actress who asked why there aren't more contemporary roles for Native actors, and so Michael Linn and Keith Davenport changed course and wrote the screenplay about a Native family living on Pine Ridge.

The story involves a family that is like any other family, except that strange things start to happen in their home, Carolyn Linn said. "There are Native American elements because they were a Native American family, so the mother calls in the medicine man. But had it been a Catholic family she would have called in a priest."

Scott Means of Rapid City had a small role in the film-a tribal police officer who responds to the Stonefeather house when trouble starts happening-and he attended the premiere in Rapid City and the party afterward.

Means appreciated that the movie starred Native actors but had a mainstream theme.

"I love it. It shows us as regular people," Means said. "We're not always dancing and singing and doing Indian stuff, you know. We have lives like everybody else, and that's what I liked about it."

The movie was scary, using loud music and sounds to startle the audience, and afterward, when people talked about it, they almost all mentioned "the twist" at the end. But the content of the movie was fairly tame, and if it had been rated most likely would have earned a PG, Carolyn Linn said.

Chief Dave Bald Eagle (center) arrives by Hummer limousine and walks the red carpet into the premiere showing of the movie Imprint. Bald Eagle played the part of the medicine man, Martin Two Moons.

The movie starred Tonantzin Carmelo as Shayla Stonefeather; Carla-Rae Holland as Shayla's mother, Rebecca Stonefeather; Charlie White Buffalo as Shayla's father, Sam Stonefeather; Michael Spears as tribal police Chief Tom Grey Horse; Cory Brusseau as Shayla's boyfriend, Jonathan Freeman; Chief Dave Bald Eagle as medicine man Martin Two Moons; Tokala Clifford as Shayla's brother, Nathaniel Stonefeather; Russell Chewey as Frank Whiteshirt; and Joseph Medicine Blanket as Robbie Whiteshirt.

Michael Linn directed.

Carolyn Linn said the movie will be released initially on 17 screens in North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Nebraska, and Colorado.

The movie will play at Carmike for a week after the premiere and longer if it does well, she said.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

Thank you for taking the time to read my letter. As the summer ends, I finally have the opportunity to write to you.

I was very reluctant, I have been reading your columns for quite some time now and have always wanted to write in and have some of my questions answered. Right now, I have come to a point that I have just the questions that I absolutely want the answers to. I believe in your gift and know that you can provide me with insight.

First of all, I am a stay-at-home mom, I do enjoy it but sometimes I feel useless. Especially when my family members think that staying home, cooking, cleaning, and taking care of kids isn't work.

I graduated high school almost a decade ago and I had a lot of dreams when I did. I put all of that on the back burner for my kids and my husband....or so I thought. Do you see me finally digging up the courage to go out and find a part-time job or start taking classes again? I've been wanting to go into education, is that the field I eventually work in?

How long will it take, will I stick it out? My whole life has always revolved around education and what it means in a persons life but my life has been sidetracked, I want to know if it's not too late and how much older I will be when I finally have my own career.

About my marriage. My husband has been having problems and our relationship has changed so much, I do believe that it is spiritual.

Will we work out our problems and be best friends again? I do love him soo much but at times he does not believe me, I have to try so hard to make him happy sometimes.

Will I ever make him happy enough to have faith in me? I want to know if our marriage is truly "it"....that it will last until "death do us part". Will we have any more children? Will it be a boy? Please let me know about that one.

The next thing is about myself. Just myself. I have been having weird thoughts. I often wonder if I should seek professional help to help me work things out. I feel like most often times, I have to put on a mask, a temporary personality for people. I do feel like a fake. I am happy but I wanted sooo much in my life, I had goals, dreams of becoming successful. I do understand that I have a family and that I can do whatever I want but I hold myself back.

I feel stupid sometimes with the way my life turned out....I would never take back my children though. Will I ever be a mature woman with the thoughts of a person who is happy and content with what they have?

The last thing is about my relatives who have passed on. I lost two dear relatives in the past three years that have been huge blows to my whole family. My aunt, who was like a mother to me passed and I loved her so much, I miss her so much, there's a void in our lives without her. Is she happy where she is? I believe I will see her again but I don't want to spend the rest of my life wondering if she suffered too much and if she was angry at me for not being around when she passed....please let me know.

My uncle passed not even a year ago and he passed in a way that has left me confused. Did he suffer? What was he doing in the place that he was found? I have to know. We all miss him and talk about him all the time, there was so much I loved about him, I feel his life was cut short.

I believe that you have the answers that I seek, Anna. You have given advice for so many others that I admire your insight and your gift. You understand human nature like nobody I have ever met!

Thank you so much, have a blessed day!

SAH mom who seeks answers

Dear SAH Mom:

You have just reached a time in your life that every woman and man comes to. A time of change and challenge. Many people work their lives to go to school, work, and then have children.

Many other people work it the other way around. There are advantages and disadvantages to either choice.

I do see you going back to school in January, 2008. You can change that if you want, but you are getting older anyway, and you might as well spend your time preparing yourself to begin a new journey. You will do fine in school.

I see you taking just two classes to begin with. After the first semester, I see you taking more and more classes each time until you carry a full load. It will take you a little over five years to get your degree. You are going to be five years older anyway, so you might as well begin now.

Your husband's happiness? Boy, you actually think that you are responsible for his happiness? How about my happiness? Are you responsible for that? Are you responsible for your parents happiness? Your children's?

My point is simple: If you could make someone else happy you would. But, you see, you can't make anyone else happy. That would mean you would have complete control over every aspect of them. We could equate that assumption to a control issue. Got those going on in your life?

Your husband determines his own happiness just like you determine yours.

He is just preoccupied in his life with his work, his family, and monetary issues. To be his friend, first find your equality. Then remember that he loves you. Try that.

Will your marriage work? There are no guarantees that any marriage will work. It depends on your commitment to each other's dream.

Are you committed to his path and enhancing him on his path, and is he committed to your path and enhancing you on that path, and are you both committed to the "us" path, and to enhancing that? That is day-to-day living stuff.

Right now you are headed towards an eventual separation. If you want to change that then do that.

Another child? I think you are bored and feel that a child will fill that. There is no immediate pregnancy that I see, or not one for several years anyway.

You are young. Women usually realize their full potential of self somewhere in their fifties. You have some time left yet, so just relax. The mask you feel you wear is just a representation of your understanding that you are not yet complete or done yet. You haven't finished evolving. That is fine and normal. You know you are more, that there is more, and you are not yet sure who you are. That is youth and the realization that there is more to you than you know about. There is still more of you "hidden" inside your mask of fear than you know.

Let go of being afraid that you haven't done anything in your life yet that you wanted to do, and be grateful because you know you will continue to grow in a good way and a new way, everyday. The dream is for your life-time, and does not expire in your late twenties and early thirties.

Your auntie is fine. She did not focus on disappointment when she was making her transition. She did not focus on anger or resentment. She was, in this world, a beautiful love-filled, generous spirit. It isn't her moment of death that was the most impactful thing about her life; it was her living. She loved you then and she loves you now.

Let go of your fear - it is just guilt turned inwards leading to more grief than you need. We love people. It is most important that we share that with them during their life than to worry if we will be with them when they pass. The thing is, everyone makes that journey - essentially on the physical level, alone. We are born alone, and we die without physical company. We are truly not alone because we have the power of the Love of the Creator, the Spirits, and our family members who have lived before us to help us during that transition.

On the physical plane, however, it is a solo journey. Your aunt is fine and watches out for her many loves ones left behind.

Your uncle seems to have left his body suddenly. One moment he was there and the next he was gone. No suffering involved. He was where he was because he had some questionable friends that he enjoyed. If you want more information see me in person. Let the questions go. He wasn't a saint, he was a man. He was a good man, and for the most part lived in a good way. He loved his family and he loved his friends. That is all that matters. He is fine and also checks in on his family members a lot - particularly four children.

Blessings to you. Your life is open for business. Have a good time creating out of your time the dream you want to own.

Dear Anna,

I hope all is well and good. Today I find myself in a difficult position. This last month has been a challenging one for me but I try my hardest to stay strong and to keep my mind set on what I need to do. My relationship has been going totally down hill and I don't know whether to believe the allegations I have been hearing. I don't want to believe they are true.

Can you tell me if what everyone is saying is true? Did these things really happen? And am I fighting a losing battle or will things get better for us. I have been thinking about moving. Do you think we can make it if he came with me? Thank you for all the past information I have received from you.

Lost

Dear Lost:

It isn't what they say that scares you it is the feeling that they are telling you the truth. Your own intuition is not arguing with them but within yourself. You are very afraid that you have been told the truth.

What if it is the truth? Can you live with it? Can you live with him in a good way without torturing him with your mistrust?

Give yourself a break. I see separation from him as a good thing while you think about things.

I do see you moving and it looks like a good thing. Good Luck and God Bless.

Todd County corrals Mustangs 36-0 as Krogman finishes with 305 yards

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

MISSION - Little Wound brought their undefeated, 3-0 record and number five ranking in the 11A poll to Mission Friday night only to find a Todd County team that paid no attention to the advanced billing of the Mustangs while they mixed a strong running game with a good passing attack to knock Little Wound from the undefeated ranks with a 36-0 win.

"We wanted to key on Brice Hornbeck and force their younger players to step up," said Bob Kornely, Todd County coach, "plus it was our Homecoming and that provided some extra motivation for a good game and then there is Gunner Krogman, he had a super all around game."

CJ Spotted Tail opened the scoring for the Falcons on their first play from scrimmage with a 26 yard pass for a touchdown to Jaden Allen after Todd County blocked Little Wound's punt. After stopping Little Wound again, Krogman ran it over from the three yard line for Todd County's second TD and CJ hit Lawyer Claymore for the two point conversion pass and a 14-0 Todd County lead after the first quarter.

Spotted Tail found Mike Neiss in the end zone for his second TD pass and Little Wound was called for a hold in the end zone forcing a safety and Todd County had a 22-0 halftime lead.

"We just couldn't get anything going," said Darrell Hunter, Little Wound coach, "and when we did, like Hornbeck's 90 kick-off return for a touchdown, it was called back because of a block in the back."

In the fourth quarter, Spotted Tail scored on a two yard quarterback keeper and Krogman ran for the two point conversion and Krogman closed out the scoring with a a seven yard run for a TD, the kick failed.

Krogman finished with 23 carries for 155 yards and two touchdowns, four catches for 55 yards and one pass for 50 yards. Spotted Tail was 12 of 16 for 199 yards, two touchdowns and two interceptions. Aaron Stoddard rushed eight times for 36 yards while mike Neiss carried the ball eight times for 30 yards and caught four passes for 95 yards and one touchdown. Allen caught two passes for 30 yards and a TD and Lawyer Claymore grabbed two passes for 19 yards. Krogman led the defense with 14 tackles, Allen had eight, Noah Kalonzo finished with seven, Stoddard had five and Neiss had four tackles and two interceptions.

For Little Wound, Kevin Hunter carried the ball 16 times for 46 yards, JC Mesteth had four carries for 21 yards. Trin In The Woods completed four of ten passes for 31 yards and one interception, Jeremy Red Cloud was one of 14 for 16 yards and Hunter was one of two for 32 yards. Hornbeck had three catches for 48 yards, Michael Pretty Voice Crane caught one for 13 yards and Casey Montileaux grabbed two for 18 yards. Cory Youong led the defense with 11 tackles, one sack and one forces fumble; Pretty Voice Crane had ten tackles, one forced fumble and one interception and Hornbeck added eight tackles, one forced fumble and one interception.

"I'm proud of the boys, they never quit, they didn't get mad and all of us are looking forward to Pine Ridge and our Homecoming game on Friday," said Hunter.

Both teams are 3-1 now, Little Wound will host Pine Ridge in their Homecoming game at 1 p.m. on Friday (Little Wound was trying to rent temporary lights and have their Homecoming game under the lights on Friday night, Pine Ridge wanted to follow the contract by having the game at 1 p.m as the contract stated). Todd County hosts St. Francis on Thursday night because of the Lakota Nation volleyball tournament on Friday and Saturday in Rapid City.

Prevention walk brings awareness to suicide problem

Ten deaths in one year attributed to suicide

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - With a great sense of urgency a four directions suicide prevention walk was held at 7 p.m. on Sunday with the Rosebud Sioux tribal building as the point of convergence by walkers from the sacred tatuya topa or four directions.

For many Rosebud residents the epidemic is rather unsettling for at least ten people have lost their lives to suicide since the beginning of the year. It is a phenomenon which professionals, politicians and community members alike are struggling to address through such walks, task force meetings and other public awareness campaigns.

Tillie Black Bear and her staff of the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society hosted the event which saw approximately 150, mostly Sicangu tribal members, while Duane Martin, Sr. of the Strong Hearts Society was also present representing the Oglala.

The event was supposed to be a candle light walk as everyone was given a candle, however, the south wind, itokakatakiya blew strong all day long and no one could light their candles until they finished their walk. Black Bear started the event by saying, "There have been a lot of suicide attempts. As Sicangu oyate we need to bring together the legislative people and the medicine people. I hope you brought pictures to give to the legislative body."

Martin explained to the gathering that he had been invited and would be singing a special song after the walk that he had learned in Hill City where he lives. He said, "A nephew almost took his life and so I took the opportunity to involve myself in Rapid City and Hill City. I went on the hill. I will share that song I learned from the wind people."

Joanne Crow Dog gives children attending the event a drink of water as a source of strength and healing at the candle light suicide prevention walk sponsored by the White Buffalo Calf Woman's Society in Rosebud last Sunday evening.

He also presented tee shirts to Black Bear, Crow Dog, Burdette Clifford of Sinte Gleska University and Dr. Dan Foster of the Indian Health Service who worked tirelessly to address the suicide issue on the Rosebud.

Sicangu medicine men, Leonard Crow Dog and Roy Stone, Sr. prayed for those who journeyed to the spirit world because of suicide. Crow Dog said, "Why is it happening? We, the parents are solely responsible for our kids…We've been abused by the federal government and its constitution."

RST President, Rodney M. Bordeaux also spoke prior to the walk. He said,

OLC establishes Frank Fools Crow scholarship

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College announces that it has established the Frank Fools Crow Scholarship. This scholarship will be given to students who are continuing in the path of tribal leadership and culture.

"Fools Crow was the nephew of Black Elk of the famous Black Elk Speaks. He also had books written about him by historians Thomas Mails and James Welch. When the federal government outlawed cultural and religious practices, he was part of a group who kept the sacred Lakota rites alive on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Much of what OLC teaches in Lakota history, language, and culture classes was the result of his and other elders' brave efforts to keep the culture alive. Fools Crow died in 1989.

In 1988, Fools Crow spoke these words to the OLC graduates, "Our grandfathers told us that life is a never ending circle and our circle was broken when we were put on this reservation. Oglala Lakota College is helping our people to come back full circle through education."

"Fools Crow was one of the most respected and influential spiritual leaders on our reservation," stated OLC President Thomas Shortbull. "He was the inspiration for many of the spiritual leaders who came forward from the 1960s until today."

For those wishing to contribute to the Frank Fools Crow Scholarship, contributions can be sent to Thomas Shortbull, OLC President, PO Box 490, Kyle, SD 57752.

For information, contact Thomas Shortbull at 605-455-6020 or Marilyn Pourier, OLC Development Director, at 605-455-6045.

Virtual high school enrolls students across the reservation

BATESLAND - Using Friday, Sept. 28 as a deadline for this first push to enroll students in the new Shannon County Virtual High school, school district personnel were in Red Shirt, Rockyford and Wolf Creek last Thursday and Friday and back in those three sites plus Batesland on Wednesday looking to enroll as many new high school students as possible. As of noon on Wednesday, Sept. 26, 39 students had registered, 19 freshman, 16 sophomores, one junior and three seniors.

"We ask that interested students bring a copy of any high school transcript, basically a record of any high school credits they already may have and then to take an assessment to help us determine what level of class each student would best fit," said Dr. Curt Voight, new Shannon County Schools superintendent, "we were shooting for about 100 students in this first fall session and currently we're advertising for a virtual high school coordinator for each of our major attendance centers of Wolf Creek, Batesland, Red Shirt and Rockyford."

The Shannon County Virtual high school is not your traditional high school, added Voight; the school will not be a high school with a physical setting but will use computers and the internet to complete classwork using the current attendance centers already in existence - schools in Batesland, Wolf Creek, Rockyford and Red Shirt to earn credits for a high school diploma.

"We are not talking about creating this high school from scratch, currently the state has about 108 classes that are established and are offered on the internet and authorizing Shannon County for a high school allows us to register students for those classes and to grant credit towards a high school degree," said Voight, "our goal is to find a space at our current schools, fill the room with notebook computers with internet access and stay open from noon to 8 p.m. Monday through Friday and maybe 9a.m.-12 noon or 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday to provide students with an opportunity to enroll and work on their high school classes on the computer."

Over the past year, before I came to work for Shannon County, I was involved in a study looking at tracking the eighth grade graduates from Batesland, Wolf Creek, Rockyford and Red Shirt," said Dr. Curt Voight, new superintendent of Shannon County schools, "we found that less than 30 percent of the eighth graduates finished high school; that is a terrible situation for both the student and the health of the community."

Interested students or parents may contact the principal of any of the schools that make up Shannon County schools or call Vicki Grant, Shannon County Schools curriculum developer and now high school principal at the Shannon County schools main office in Batesland or calling 605-288-1921.

"It's good that we see a lot of people here. We need spiritual help, both Christian and Lakota. Let's get together, join forces and support each other…we need to come together to support one another. We want something for our young to do. Restore pride in our culture…we have to stop it (suicide) I can't do it myself."

After all walkers had completed their walk it began to rain and everyone moved inside where all of the wakanyeja or children were asked to sit in the middle. The children were asked to line up and Joan Crow Dog gave each one a drink of water. Black Bear then asked all of the other young people to stand up and there were many in attendance. She asked the children to look around as one day they would also be teens and then older people.

The encouragement and emotional support that was extended to the gathering of children in the circle was one of the positive highlights of the evening. Those in attendance felt the connection to them and shared a common hope that suicide would touch their lives directly.

Two Strike community member, Ned Metcalf who helped to coordinate the event explained to the children and other visitors that everyone should know the four directions song and that everyone would sing it together as a way of honoring the need for Lakota to be spoken everywhere.

Metcalf said he would like to see Lakota spoken in the schools, menus items listed in Lakota and given some attention by the tribal council.

Some of the servers were Marcida Eagle Bear of the RST Alcohol Treatment Program, Hattie Dunham of the RST Tribal Education truancy program and daughter, Brianne.

Toward the end of the program Black Bear informed everyone that a monthly suicide prevention walk would be held as RST president Bordeaux quickly announced his support for such a regularly scheduled walk.

New OST Public Safety Charter waits for seating of board of trustees

PINE RIDGE - The deadline for interested applicants for the new five member board of trustees for the Oglala Sioux Tribe's Department of Public Safety was Sept. 20 and out of 25 applications either picked up or mailed out, 14 were returned to the OST Secretary's office.

Originally, the council was hoping to be able to select the five member board at a special session of the council on Friday, Sept. 28 but because of the extensive background check required, the list will not be ready for review and selection of the council until their regular council meeting in October, according to staff at the OST Secretary's office in Pine Ridge.

The structure of the new board requires that each individual have no felonies on their record at all, that they have no family member working in public safety and not serve on other boards that would represent a conflict of interest with public safety including the council and executive board.

Crusaders crush Eagle Butte 52-6

Scott adds 125 yards, three scores to season totals

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Up only 22-6 at the half, Red Cloud's defense stepped up again Friday to seal the deal as Billy Scott intercepted a Chase Pay Pay pass and zipped 80 yards for a touchdown and Andrew Twiss grabbed another of Pay Pay's passes and ran it back 30 yards for a touchdown, both in the third quarter, to put the icing on the cake of Red Cloud's 52-6 homecoming win over Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Friday.

Scott, a 176 pound senior running back, added touchdown runs of eight and two yards while Jeremy Blacksmith hit Dave Giago on short passes in the end zone for two point conversions on both and helped even more with a 25 yard touchdown pass to Mike Cuny and a 44 yarder to Giago for another TD. Carl Swallow ran for three two point conversions including one after his own 28 yard TD run that wrapped up the scoring for both teams.

"We had a nice mix of run and pass today," said Keith Ferguson, Red Cloud coach, "and on defense, we gave up a long pass for a TD early on after a missed assignment in the defensive backfield but after that we seemed to shut down both Eagle Butte's running game and passing game finishing up with six interceptions, two for touchdowns, and recovering two Brave fumbles."

Scott opened the scoring for the Crusaders with an eight yard plunge for a touchdown late in the first quarter, blacksmith hit Giago for the two points and quickly Red Cloud was up 8-0 but Eagle Butte came right back with their only score of the game as Charlie Marshall got behind Red Cloud's defense and Pay Pay led him with a perfect strike for an 82 yard pass for a touchdown. Red Cloud owned the end zone for the rest of the game as the contest was called with 2:54 left in the fourth quarter.

"This week, we had our best week of practice, it was a great prep week," said Ferguson, "and it showed on the field during the game, our line is really coming together on both offense and defense."

Scott finished with 17 carries for 125 yards and two touchdowns; he added a third TD on an interception return and is one of the top scorers in the state with 56 points after four games and a ranked rusher with 53 carries for 472 yards. Swallow totaled 64 yards on seven carries with one touchdown and three two point conversions.

Blacksmith was five for ten in passing for 89 yards and two touchdowns and two two point conversions; Giago caught four for 64 yards including the 44 yard TD catch and both conversions and Cuny caught one for a 25 yard TD. Twiss led the defense with 18 tackles, recovered a fumble and ran an interception back for 30 yards and a touchdown while Art Vitalis grabbed two interceptions, Scott had two and Cuny had one.

Homecoming activities included a parade in the morning, a pep rally, a talent show and the crowning of Casey Zimiga and Ida Clark as 2007 Homecoming royalty.

Red Cloud is now 3-1 and travels to Hill City on Friday while Cheyenne Eagle Butte is 2-2 and visits Belle Fourche Friday night.

Activists seek help from Budweiser to alcoholism

By Carson Walker
Associated Press Writer

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - Organizers of an effort to keep booze off South Dakota's Pine Ridge Reservation where alcohol is banned, but alcoholism is rampant, plan to take their case to the nation's largest beer company.

Anheuser-Busch is the latest target of activists upset that four stores in tiny Whiteclay, Neb. just yards from the reservation border - sell about 4 million cans of alcohol a year, mostly to American Indians who live on the 16,500-member reservation.

Some Oglala Sioux tribal members and those affiliated with the activist group Nebraskans for Peace have twice tried to set up roadblocks to stop vehicles entering the reservation and confiscate any alcohol.

They also protested last month outside the Scottsbluff, Neb., Budweiser distributor and now are trying to land a meeting with Anheuser-Busch in St. Louis.

Budweiser products account for 86 percent of alcohol sales in Whiteclay: 356,283 wholesale gallons in 2006, compared to 38,559 gallons from the Pabst distributor and 17,298 from Coors, according to the Nebraska Liquor Control Commission.

Duane Martin Sr., one of six tribal members arrested in June during the last failed blockade, said Anheuser-Busch has the right to sell its beverages but also has a responsibility to help quell chronic alcoholism among Indians.

``They're not taking a serious look at what it's doing to people in Whiteclay,'' he said.

Anheuser-Busch officials wouldn't say if they would meet with Martin and others but did issue a statement from Carol Clark, vice president of corporate social responsibility.

``At Anheuser-Busch, we brew our beers to be enjoyed responsibly by adults. No company benefits when its products are misused. That's why, since 1982, Anheuser-Busch and our 600 wholesalers nationwide, including the wholesaler serving this area, have invested more than $675 million to promote responsibility and fight alcohol abuse,'' Clark's statement read.

``While we are certain these individuals are well-intentioned, we do not believe asking our company or our wholesaler to stop selling our products is the way to address these problems. Eliminating sales would affect responsible adult consumers and harm retailers throughout the area.''

But Mark Vasina, president of Nebraskans for Peace, said beer companies need to be more of a player and could do more, short of pulling their products off the shelves.

``Nobody has ever said Anheuser-Busch is the sole agent or that the beer companies are the sole agents responsible for what's going on in Whiteclay or on the reservation,'' he said. ``We're all responsible. We all need to work on solutions.''

Vasina plans to accompany Martin to St. Louis and encourage Budweiser to consider funding an alcohol treatment program or detoxification center, for example.

``What about returning some of those profits to the community?'' Vasina said.

Demand for alcohol has led to sales to minors, bootlegging, selling on credit, and exchanging alcohol for sexual favors, Vasina said. It has also contributed to accidents, violence, sexual abuse and suicide, according to the alcohol and drug program for the reservation.

The reservation's youth suicide rate is the highest in the nation, and most involve alcohol.

Shannon County, where most Pine Ridge residents live, is home to less than 2 percent of South Dakota's population but had 19 percent of the fatalities caused by drunken driving in 2005, 14 of the 74 deaths statewide, according to the South Dakota Department of Public Safety.

Whiteclay is one of several so-called drinking hubs where nearby residents of the nation's roughly 500 dry communities congregate to drink.

Malt liquor is the beverage of choice, and one of the popular products is Hurricane Malt Liquor, a Budwesier product with 6 percent alcohol.

``I could almost guarantee if you went into a poor, low-income neighborhood, you're going to find a lot more malt liquor beer,'' said Ricky Bluthenthal, senior social scientist with the RAND Corp.

He led a 2005 study in South Los Angeles, Calif., that found malt liquor drinkers differed from people who drink regular beer or hard liquor.

The research, funded by the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, concluded that malt liquor drinkers were more apt to be homeless, unemployed and live in public housing.

Malt liquor users also reported drinking daily or nearly every day and consuming more alcohol than other drinkers, the study found.

Compared to regular beer, malt liquor has a higher alcohol content, usually is sold in larger containers and is cheaper, Bluthenthal said.

``If it had the same alcohol content as regular beer, it would probably be less harmful to the people who drink it,'' he said. ``They're drinking 40 to 50 percent more alcohol than if they drank a regular beer.''

Some Internet reviews rate Hurricane OK on taste and great for a cheap buzz and also allude to its popularity on reservations.

Racist stereotypes in the land of the free

Wanblii Ake Glii

I never thought much about the sport teams and schools with offensive names referring to Native's before.

I knew about them and realized they were definitely a problem that had to be fixed. But I never really understood how wrong they were until I moved to California. The town I live in is called Fallbrook.

It's a small town of about 30,000 people. If you were to drive through on the main road you would pass right by the one and only high school. Close to the road there is a building about 50 feet high, and painted on the side is the school's logo, a huge traditional looking northern Indian war bonnet with 26 eagle feathers.

Below is a smaller sign with a painted red man wearing a headdress. And beneath the mural it says, "Home of the Warriors." Until then I had never in person come across a school, sports team or mascot that represented my people in such a humiliating way. It was a slap in the face.

I later went to the schools website and read about the history of the name. It says it was chosen in 1934 to "honor" the Native American students who also went to school there.

I thought about that and did the math. "Honor" and 73 years ago, that was in a time before the civil rights movement of African Americans began. Racial segregation was still in effect against Africans, and Indians and Mexicans were treated the same if not worse. It was at a time when the majority of the nation believed people of a darker color where less than the "white American."

Although, African Americans do have their civil rights recognized today, it did take them 200 hundred years of slavery, and another 100 or so putting up with racism.

And we Native's are still fighting just to be acknowledged as equal human beings.

Last time I read there were some 2,000 high schools and colleges throughout America with names offensive to Native people, 181 being in California, which ranks number 2 in the U.S. for use of offensive mascots against Native Americans.

Of course, professional sport teams also have names and mascots that stereotype us as well. In football, there are the Kansas City Chiefs and the Washington Red Skins; in baseball, the Cleveland Indians and the Atlanta Braves; in hockey, the Chicago Black Hawks; and in basketball, the Golden State Warriors.

And in the atmosphere of these "games" it creates attitudes that mock and belittle our religion, beliefs, and culture, and it keeps American's blinded from seeing the real world of Natives. These attitudes make it easy to dehumanize us, and it maintains the ignorance of the people who contribute to this point of view.

The effects of centuries of forced change against Native people and the continuing cruelty of the government go unnoticed to the majority of America. But the country's treatment of Native people that is seen by America is viewed by most as acceptable.

It has given them the mind-set that nothing is wrong with "honoring Indians" by naming sport teams and schools after them. Because many people are convinced there is nothing wrong with these actions they will do everything they can not to change their team or school name all for the sake of a "game."

They either don't know or don't care about what it must feel like to Native people to see their resemblance in the form of a disrespectful mascot of either a school of sports team.

The psychological effect this has on our Native youth has been documented, and it does have a negative effect on them by lowering their self-esteem, and slowing down their learning ability. And you may be surprised to know that studies were also done on European American students who were exposed to these stereotyped images of Native Americans.

The results showed that while Native youth felt lowered self esteem, the European students who viewed these images experienced a heightened self esteem compared to the European students who didn't see these images.

That tells me people who join in supporting these negative images do so because it makes them feel good about themselves. How wrong and disturbing is that?

School's are for educating the future people of this world. I would hope that truth, integrity, and equality are a schools main focus in education. I would hope all people involved in education would be willing to put a stop to discrimination.

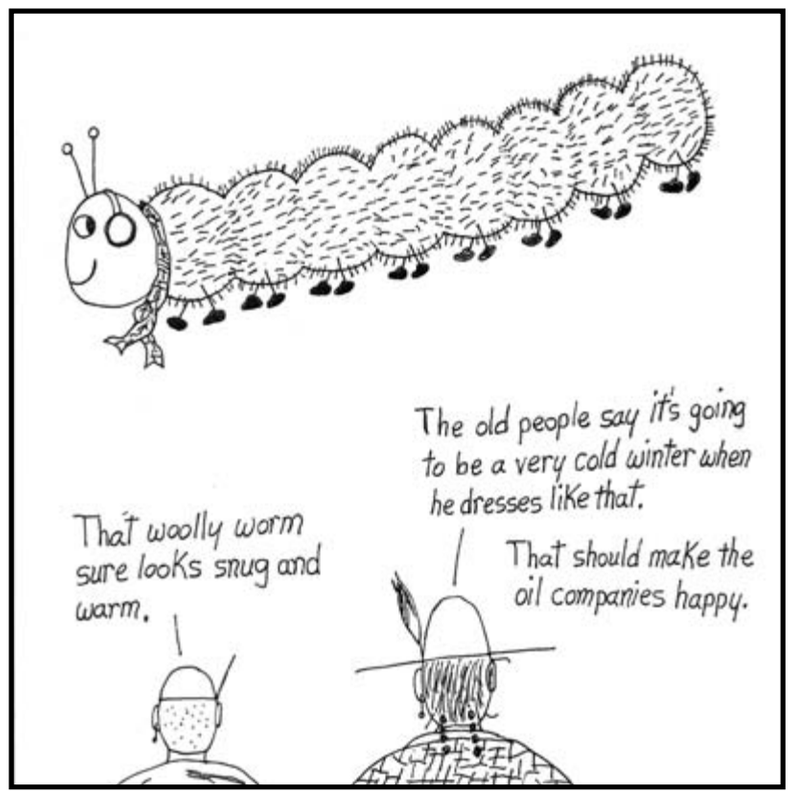
We as human beings have come far this last century in understanding our world and our universe, but we still have so much more to learn about being human.

And as long as educational institutions, sport teams, and the American people fail to recognize this racial disregard of Native people this nation will always be stuck in its progress for betterment and it will only worsen.

When are these false beliefs and ill attitudes of Native Americans going to stop and be understood?

What is it going to take for Americans to finally realize as a whole that racism has been bleeding their nation for too long now?

Today, if these similar attitudes and actions were done against African Americans it would not be tolerated. So why are these signs of discrimination still here against Native Americans?



A person could probably come up with quite a few correct answers to that last question.

But I feel the underlying reason why America thinks there is nothing wrong with portraying us the way they do, is because our true history has never been taught in their grade/high school systems.

It's why generations of Americans have disrespected us for so long; they do so because they don't know better. It's not their fault, but rather the ones who have distorted our history and hid it from their people out of fear that their people might know the truth behind their blessed nation.

They are the forefathers of America and the leaders of today who have been guiding their people in their "Land of the Free" while the country's true owners and first people watch from separated boundaries, and do not share in their dream.

Inmates need to stand up for themselves

Dear Editor:

These words go out to all indigenous prisoners who are doing time in prisons where our sacred Pipe, sacred objects, ceremonies, pow wows, meetings, access to our spiritual leaders, and other ways of our own rehabilitation are being denied by wardens and prison administrations.

Remain strong in your struggles and endeavors. Some of you are starting to understand these battles and some of you exhausted all of your remedies. A majority of you are tired and don't want anything to do with these denials and discriminatory practices of not letting our prayers happen. Some of you may not care.

We have a right to smoke our sacred Pipes and burn our ceremonial herbs.

We have a right to build our Inipi (Rite of Purification or Sweatlodge) and participate in this ceremony. We have a right to unify in our pow wows, meetings, ceremonies, and have access to our Spiritual Leaders. We have a right to share in our own forms of rehabilitation. We have a right to legally challenge our wardens and prison administrations.

The Supreme Court unanimously overturned a Sixth Circuit decision that barred most prisoners from asserting our constitutional rights.

We can now file lawsuits directly in federal court. Contact Elizabeth Alexander, Director of the ACLU National Prison Project, and request a copy of Jones v. Beck. Also, look at Cutter v. Wilkinson. There are things we can do legally to defend ourselves.

We know there are wardens and prison administrations who do not understand the laws and our way of life. They use their own legal theories and violate our spiritual and cultural rights. Maybe they don't know or realize they are violating our rights. Federal law precedes state law. Federal law protects us.

We must always remember this, especially, in prisons where federal monies are used for our rehabilitation.

Stand up for yourself and those who are with you. We no longer have to file grievances in order to bring a lawsuit against anyone who continually denies us the right to pray. Study our laws. Be patient. Find a lawyer or a law firm who will help you get into court.

The Prison Litigation Reform Act (PLRA) or 1996 is no longer a law.

Find outside Spiritual Leaders and people who will support your causes and the purposes of your work.

These people will be very effective if they can speak our native languages and believe in our traditional lifeways. In most cases, these people can talk directly with the wardens and prison officials, and build a consensus of trust and respect. These communications usually open the door for our way of life to be brought in without a lawsuit and other legal action.

Open diplomacy doesn't always work. Some wardens and prison administrations, and their predecessors, have not and will not recognize anything that relates to our way of life.

This is where we have to file lawsuits and get ourselves before a judge.

In the prisons of South Dakota open diplomacy has worked because we have a large number of Lakota, Dakota and Nakota prisoners.

We have a powerful system of working with our Spiritual Leaders and people who sincerely believe in our way of life. We haven't filed a lawsuit in many years.

The Main Prison and the Jameson Annex in Sioux Falls doesn't allow immediate family members in for our pow wows, we cannot have full-time language and indigenous classes, our tribal prisoners are not allowed to teach our way of life in the schools, we cannot return home to our families for funerals, and we cannot have eagle claws in our possession at anytime. We have a long list of growing problems.

Write to Rick Two Dogs, Charles White Elk, Sydney Has No Horse, and Michael Cross. These men are powerful Lakota spiritual people who speak our Lakota language and believe in all areas of our spiritual and cultural lifeways.

Our people depend on these men. Rick Two Dogs, P.O. Box 325, Porcupine, SD, 57772. Charles White Elk, P.O. Box 188, Kyle, SD, 57752. Sydney Has No Horse, Wakpamni District, Batesland, SD 57716. Michael Cross, Pejuta Haka (Medicine Root) District, Kyle, SD, 57752.

Contact Michelle Tyon, Mattie High Pipe, Myrna Thompson, and Belinda Joe for further help. These women work for us as tribal/prison liaisons on behalf of every tribal prisoner incarcerated in the prisons of South Dakota. Each of these women are very wise and respectful. They support us with honor and traditional compassion.

Northern Perspectives

It's up to us to provide the leadership

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Beautiful autumn weather has now arrived and I was able to see the Todd County and Little Wound School homecoming game last Friday.

That kind of extra-curricular activity and social interaction among students that it promotes is a very good thing.

Competition in any form makes us better and I hear a number of people commenting that that kind of competitiveness should also spill over to the academic side of our children's education.

Some also question whether or not there is too much emphasis placed upon being a good athlete and I know that one can be good at both.

Many universities call their students who play sports "student-athletes" and it is their way of emphasizing the need to be both.

In fact, some athletic conferences will publish a list of their athletes who have attained an excellent grade point average while also succeeding on the playing field.

I loved playing basketball, baseball and football when growing up, but I was a bit sub-par on all accounts.

I was also an average student and I think I would have benefited from being challenged a bit more.

I think I would have enjoyed interactive educational programs like the kids have now.

We never had tutors or access to the many resources that children have available to them now and I think I would have been a much better student.

Another peripheral issue as they say, is that we need to elevate those youngsters who are working hard to achieve academically and who will never step on the playing field because they are not good enough or because they simply want to plan for their academic future.

As Lakota people, we do not like to celebrate the academic accomplishments of others until they have left for other parts of the universe and that sends a poor message to our children.

We should be proud of our own who have made the effort to show the world that academic achievement is possible.

On the Rosebud alone, we have physicians like Dr. Sophie Two Hawk and Dr. Lucy Riefel to name a couple.

We should be talking about their dedicated efforts to bring preventative medicine to the people.

Lucy has also spent endless hours promoting literacy in the schools and that kind of work is admirable.

It's kind of like learning math.

One of the best ways that I can learn it is if you show me a good model that I can follow step by step and learn the process on my own.

If I did, I likely would not forget the procedure and all would be well.

If we show our children a positive role model who has achieved academically, they can see the process in action for themselves and know that they are equally as capable of modeling such an exercise.

I have seen many of our children in action on the playing field, in the classroom and on the streets and I know that many have the right stuff to succeed in life.

We adults simply need to continue to give them the right tools, motivation, purpose and positive example of what is possible when you work hard.

We were put here to provide leadership for our families and to keep them focused on the ultimate goal of providing for themselves and their families and from where I sit I know that we can do that with much more dedicated effort.

Dr. Archie Beauvais, (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and currently works as the director of the Lakota language preservation project for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe.

Notes From Indian Country

I remember Kyle

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

While researching on the Internet today I ran across the announcement that a 75-year-old man from Kyle, on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, had passed away. His name was Sidney Hunter.

I remember Sid as a young boy swimming and playing at Kyle Dam.

You see, Kyle was my hometown and it was a place where everybody felt safe. It was a place where all of the kids could go to Kyle Dam and spend the entire day and our folks wouldn't worry one bit.

Sid was two years older than me and was already a veteran of the Holy Rosary Indian Mission Boarding School. After I started school there I remember him as a really tough kid that nobody wanted to mess with.

He was good on a horse and in the cowboy language of today he would be called a "real hand."

I had a lot of friends at Kyle. There was my immediate family as playmates, my brother Tony and my sisters Mary Jane, Sophie, Ethel, Lillian and the baby Shirley. Mary Jane would join the WACS in 1941 and report to San Antonio, Texas for basic training.

Billy and Johnny Bear lived down the hill from me and "Dutch" Apple and Albert Janis, plus the Garnette boys, "Heavy" and "Frosty," and their sister Elizabeth, always stopped to visit and stay awhile when they were in town. We spent most of that summer fishing and swimming in Kyle Dam.

At other times my dad would take us out to Three-Mile-Creek to visit his sister, my Aunt Lucy Vocu, and we would ride horses with my cousins Leo, Bobby, Melvin, Donna Mae, and Rosie. Leo would join the Navy as World War II started and Bobby and Melvin, we called Melvin "Buzzy," would join the Marines. The Lakota people are very patriotic.

My father stood up as the godfather to Shirley Apple Murphy and she became my Lakota sister. Her little sister Cecelia would be the first woman ever elected as president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

There was an elderly priest named Father Sialm who was from the German-speaking area of Switzerland who had come to the reservation to save souls.

He had a console radio and would play it very loudly with his front door wide open. We children would get a special kick out of him as he listened to the ranting of Adolph Hitler because he would shout back at Hitler in German at the top of his lungs.

Of course we didn't know what Der Fuhrer was saying and we didn't know there was a war raging in Europe.

This was before Pearl Harbor.

It's funny how the death of a friend can bring back long forgotten memories.

The Pine Ridge Reservation was in the news this week because some of the tribal members had asked Budweiser Beer to stop selling their product at the liquor outlets in the community of White Clay, Nebraska, a town that is just across the border from Pine Ridge.

Many years ago there was a drive on to legalize the sale of alcohol on the reservation. I remember one of the alcohol counselors named Melvin "Dickie" Brewer speaking out in favor of legalizing it.

He felt that anyone that wanted booze could get it from the bootleggers or just drive across the border to Nebraska.

He thought that if it were legal the Tribe would have some control over it. And his alcoholism program would be able to raise money on liquor taxes to help alleviate the problem.

Dickie used to say, "When I was drinking nobody ever put a gun to my head and told me to drink that booze or they'd shoot me."

Another drug and alcohol counselor, Glen Three Stars, told me that when men and women from Pine Ridge went to the border towns to get alcohol they tried to drink it up before they got back to the reservation and that made the highways pretty dangerous.

He called it "gulping and binging."

Of course, none of this has anything to do with Sidney Hunter or my family, but there are a lot of mixed feelings on the reservation about legalizing the sale of alcohol and since it in the news today, I thought it was important to get a couple points of view on the subject.

I was lucky to have lived in Kyle. In the summer of 1941 the annual Kyle Wacipi (dance or pow wow) was held across the street from my house.

It was held next to the Kyle Day School, the school where I attended kindergarten before I left home for the boarding school. One elder told me many years later that this was the last pow wow before so many of the young men and women joined the armed forces and went off to fight in World War II.

Many of them never came home to Kyle.

Many of the people in mentioned in this column have since departed this world.

My sisters Mary Jane, Sophie and Shirley, and my brother Tony have all passed on. And "Buzzy" is the only child of my Aunt Lucy still alive.

Billy Bear and Dutchy Apple have made that trip to the Spirit World. Perhaps they'll meet up with their old classmate Sydney Hunter as he rides that horse across the morning sky.

Pine Ridge Thorpes throttled by Bennett County in delayed game

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Bennett County upped their record on Monday with a 44-0 win over Pine Ridge in a game originally scheduled for Friday night but postponed until Monday at 2 p.m. because of the inability of getting the lights on after lightening hit a transformer in the area earlier on Friday.

Clint Sasse opened the scoring with a 14 yard touchdown run with 2:59 left in the first quarter, the pass for two failed; Nathan Novak reeled off a 37 yard TD run and John Slattery kicked the point after to give Bennett a 13-0 lead early in the second quarter.

Austin Haynes hit Orin Three Stars on a three yard slant for a TD and Slattery kicked the PAT. Sasse then hit Novak on an eight yard TD pass.

Slattery hit a 30 yard field goal as the first half wound down giving the Warriors a 29-0 lead at the half.

Haynes opened the third with his second TD pass to Three Stars, this time for 39 yards, Slattery kicked the PAT. Novak came right back and hit Novak for 14 yards and a touchdown and Slattery passed to Sasse for the two point conversion.

Sasse had 14 carries for 998 yards, Dylan Murrufo carried the ball eight times for 67 yards and Novak rushed five times for 59 yards and a touchdown and had two catches for 22 yards and two touchdowns.

Bennett County is 5-0 now and has an open date this week before hosting St. Thomas More on Oct. 5 in Martin.

Pine Ridge is 0-4 and travels to Kyle to play Little Wound on Friday at 1 p.m.

Elder files suit against Public Safety for assault

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - Frank Sioux Bob, 70, claims tribal law enforcement officers on the Pine Ridge wrongfully roughed him up and arrested him, according to a lawsuit he filed in federal court.

Frank Sioux Bob of Pine Ridge said in the civil complaint that between 11 p.m. and midnight on July 21, 2005, he was at home with his grandchildren when officers entered the house and indicated they were responding to a call about a gun.

There was no weapon in the house, no one in the place had made such a report and the officers entered without a warrant or consent, the lawsuit states.

The six or more officers bullied Sioux Bob, broke down a bedroom door, twisted his arm and assaulted him, even though he told them he was not well and had a bad shoulder and knee, it states.

``They continued to twist his arm behind his back, slammed him against the wall, cut his head, broke his glasses, threw him on the floor, and poked him in the back,'' the complaint states.

As a result, Sioux Bob claims in the lawsuit that he suffered temporary and permanent damage, including physical and psychological injury, medical bills, damage to his property, and it aggravated previous physical conditions.

The officers were employed by the Oglala Sioux Tribe's Public Safety Commission, so the defendant in the case is the United States government.

In March 2006, Sioux Bob filed a claim for a $350,000 settlement with the Bureau of Indian Affairs but no action has been taken, so he took the case to court to seek damages.

Sioux Bob's lawyer, Terry Pechota, did not want to comment for the story and U.S. Attorney Marty Jackley is prohibited from discussing pending litigation.

She is being held at Pennington County Jail on a charge of second-degree murder. Second-degree murder carries a mandatory sentence of life in prison without parole upon conviction.

The death remains under investigation.

Natural History museum returning Sitting Bull artifacts

WASHINGTON (AP) - Mementoes of Sioux Indian Chief Sitting Bull are being returned to his descendants, the Smithsonian's National Museum of Natural History announced Monday.

The return of the lock of hair and leggings belonging to Sitting Bull was requested by Ernie LaPointe, great-grandson of the Hunkpapa Lakota chief who became famous for defeating Lt. Col. George Armstrong Custer at the battle of Little Bighorn.

Sitting Bull was killed while being arrested by tribal police in 1890 and the lock of hair and leggings were obtained by an Army doctor, who later donated them to the museum.

``It has been an honor to meet the descendants of Sitting Bull, and to work together toward the return of these important items to the family,'' Bill Billeck, director of the National Museum of Natural History's Repatriation Office, said in a statement.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

My boyfriend has recently reunited with his kids. He has only met them a few times before. The mother of the kids is saying they are not his now.

I just wanted to know if they are really his? And if so, is this going to affect the relationship we built?

A question

Dear Question:

I see two children as being his. I see that you feel that there is a very strong physical resemblance to their dad. I see your boyfriend as being serious in wanting to connect with and maintain a relationship with these children.

I see the mother as not being sure who the father is; but in the light of child-support she gave her "best guess" for information to social services. In time, I see this situation being resolved with DNA testing.

The kids really like your boyfriend and want to connect. That alone will rule his heart. Good Luck!

Dear Anna,

Hau! I recently ran across The Lakota Country Times over lunch when I ran a Google search for Lakota Times. In perusing the website I happened to open up your advice column and wanted to get your thoughts regarding my situation if I may.

Currently I live in a metropolitan area in the mid-west. I left home in 1991 to attend school out of state and in doing so have not returned since then, except for holidays and family gatherings.

The educational experience opened my eyes to the world, in a societal enriching way, in as much as my traveling around the country while growing up. After finishing school I moved to the city and found employment in the I.T. world, in which I am gainfully employed. I have an avid social life, plenty of things to do and enjoy the rat race of it all!

My dilemma now is that I've been out on my own for 16 years now and in my heart do long for the plains of South Dakota. (Most notably for the Black Hills since in my heart it is "home" and have known that since I was knee high to a grasshopper. Meaning that I feel the most at ease and centered there of all the places I've been or foresee going to.)

With that said; I also know that the job market isn't the same in South Dakota as it is here and that there would be a significant pay difference along with all the other facets that drew me to the city life as well. On the other hand I know that the old ones are leaving us at an alarming rate and it is imperative to learn as much as we can from them before they do, specifically the Lakota language. I can sit and listen to everyone talk Lakota at family holiday gatherings, but cannot form a cohesive sentence to reply with on my own. Albeit I'll use the words that I know to mish mash with English in order to try and convey my thoughts/feelings/insights/humor etc. It's just not the same overall though. It's like I am walking a path that borders between technology and tradition, white culture vs. Indian culture or however you would like to deem it. I just want to make sure that I am doing the right thing overall.

I have talked with my Unci about this on numerous occasions and she has always stated that I am doing a good thing. Ultimately, I know she wants me to be happy, but as a Lakota man I need to make sure and give back to the people some how as well.

Any thoughts or insights into my issue would be greatly appreciated.

Living Between Two Worlds

Dear Living Between Two Worlds:

Time. It all in time. What you are feeling and seeing is a true heart opening - yours. Right now, you are exactly where you need to be. Don't overlook your value to the community; working in a "white world" yet holding your Lakota Cante as a true representation of a contemporary Lakota man.

You are learning, growing and teaching. When the time is right, however, you will move home. I see this in terms of a few years; but the future is not written in stone and it could be sooner. I see you preparing for your return by becoming involved in helping from where you are. From where I sit it seems prudent for you to contact The Lakota Fund in Kyle, South Dakota and begin your journey in your field.

You can utilize your skills, still earn a good living (researching and finding grants) and begin a successful enterprise at home. It is all there and here for you. Time, that's all, time. Use some of that to begin self-study of Lakota. Call Oglala Lakota College for help.

Tunkshila and the Spirits are patient. You are watched over, and you are doing your work; and that is exactly the way it should be. It is all, so to speak, sort of pre-ordained.and in Divine Order. That is the best language I can find to explain you to you.

God Bless.

Dear Anna,

I have had some strange events going on. I don't know what it is, or who it is. There is also something going on in my house. Can you shed some light on these strange happenings?

Strange Things

Dear Strange Things:

I see keys moving around and lights going on and jittering; I see thumpings and shadowy areas where the light doesn't seem to quite light the area. I see short phone rings with no one there; I see a sort of buzz of voices in the electricity wires and in the hum of the refrigerator, fan, or air conditioner. Yes, more than one thing is going on.

First of all, somehow your house and then even you and your family members are a little bit super-charged with static electricity. I think your house is in the direct line with some powerful electrical stimuli. Do you live near power lines? Are you in the direct path of a lot of radio frequency waves?

Now, the thing is, "charged" areas and people are attractors for spirits. Somehow, the excited or elevated electrical charge of an environment will tend to allow the spirits more powerful communication ability and the receivers (the people in the environment) more ability to ascertain presences (they are more sensitive).

I presume you are saging your house and your cars regularly; and telling these visitors to leave. Also, try and modify your environment with more absorbing or insulating materials. Try and avoid rayon, nylon and other manufactured polymer fabrics. They are great sources of friction (just run across the carpet and touch the light switch - especially when the environment is dry. Keep the area humid.)

And...of course, don't forget to pray. There is a grand-pa spirit present around you. He is watching out for you. He wasn't as nice of a man in his life as his spirit is now. Most of the activity around you is not the friendly visit of relatives. It is a cross-road or a doorway for communication because of its particular physical presentation.

You can also call a priest, a medicine man, or any clergy to bless the house. That will create a better environment in one way, but until the physical aspects are changed you are living in an interesting place.

Dear Anna,

I have a question for you. Do you see any spirits in my house? I always feel something when I go downstairs and I've heard stories about my family hearing things and sometimes I get a little spooky when I go down there by myself. I can feel something but I don't know what it is. Also, do you see anything wrong with me? Why sometimes my dreams that I have come true? Could you tell me if I'm having a boy or a girl?

Thanks.

Concerned for Well Being

Dear Concerned

Do you think you're having a girl? Because I see a boy but feel a girl. I'll say a boy.

The dreams you have do sometimes come true. So do mine. as do everyones. It is the Spirits way (that highest part of you - your life force, or in my terms, "the Spark of God") of allowing you to prepare for the future. It is normal.

What is wrong with you? You're tired and stressed out, and oh yeah, pregnant. Take naps. Rest. It's okay. You are pretty much okay. You are developing very strong intuition or psychic ability. Here is a warning: the easiest information to "hear, see, or feel" is negative. It is not always true, and most times is not true at all. It comes from the astral plane of existence, and I tend to think of it as a bunch of ethereal gossip and fear. It is a reality; but not necessarily the truth.

Any good information, given from a high source or loving beings is never given in a critical or negative way. It always is given with love.

I think you are frightened by your newest sensitivities and that you are interpreting this feeling as disease; or a slightly uneasy feeling. Relax and be okay. Don't worry. You are safe. You will become more sensitive to "knowing things" as time goes on. In the meantime, don't get caught up in chaos - either friends and family, or etheric.

Yes. I do see at least two spirits in your house. They have been there a long time - from when your house was a different house. It is kind of a time bleed-through. The intensity of the emotion that happened in that previous left such a strong chemical imprint in the environment that it sort of transcends time. It is now, 2007 in your environment, and sometimes you feel them. It is about 1867 in their environment and sometimes they see and feel you. Interesting, isn't it?

A Sincere and Heartfelt Thank You.....Pilamaya

From the family of Orville F. Salway Sr., or "Paha Ska" for the letters, cards, phone calls and flowers sent in his memory for the 2007 SD Hall of Fame recognition.

Our father would have been deeply honored to be acknowledged as a contributor to the Native American heritage of South Dakota. He loved greeting visitors from around the world on the streets of Keystone and he appreciated the part he played in the tourism industry of this state for 50 years. His photos and artwork that exist with South Dakotans and travelers that have visited this great state are reflective of his pride in the Lakota people and his pride in calling the Black Hills "home" all of his adult life.

First and foremost Thank you to:

for their love, dedication and respect, for submitting the nomination and for representing him in a dignified manner.

BIA assistant secretary no show at tribal chairmen's meeting

ABERDEEN - On Sept. 27 there was a meeting held of the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association. Elected leaders from Nebraska, South Dakota and North Dakota representing 13 tribal nations expected to meet with the Assistant Secretary of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Carl Altman, however he was a "no show." In a statement issued by Ron His Horse Is Thunder, the GPTC Association expressed its disappointment at the fact that Altman and the federal government should have sent their decision makers.

His Horse Is Thunder is chairman of the Standing Rock Sioux and Chairman of the GPTCA.

His Horse Is Thunder said, "Because of this disregard for sovereign tribes and the disrespect shown the elected tribal leadership and tribal governments who have signed the treaties with the United States, the tribal leaders will not stay here today. We will vote with our feet, we will walk."

Chairman Mike Jandreau of the Lower Brule Sioux also expressed his disappointment. He said, "Today, the BIA has acted disrespectfully toward tribally elected leaders and at the very minimum they should have sent the assistant secretary to meet with tribal leaders."

The GPTCA statement as issued by Chairman His Horse Is Thunder proposed to meet with Altman. He wrote, "We will in turn, put forth this proposal. We are willing to meet with Carl Altman on an Indian reservation. We will give you a time and place. The Standing Rock Sioux reservation is chosen as the location for Oct. 31."

SFIS completed, ribbon cutting ceremony planned

ST. FRANCIS - St. Francis Indian School is inviting guests to a ribbon cutting ceremony for its new school expansion building project which began in 1999 when the school submitted an application to the Bureau of Indian Affairs for school replacement funds.

James Hogan, the school expansion liaison has worked closely and effectively with current superintendent, Larry Parker, to coordinate a long process that involved many individuals. The school cultural team, planning team, school administrators, SFIS board of education and community members were involved in the project which is not fully complete.

The list of dignitaries invited for the ribbon cutting ceremony on Friday, Oct. 12 at 11 a.m. include the South Dakota congressional delegation, Rosebud Sioux tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, Cheryl Crazy Bull, SFIS alumni, representatives from the BIA office in Albuquerque, N.M. and Gordon Rosby, inspector for the BIA.

Lunch will be served at 1 p.m. and the former SFIS school board, the RST Tribal Education Interim Board and the newly elected school board are also invited to the ceremony.

The construction company and educational consultants which are involved in the construction will be invited and include Puetz Corporation of Mitchell who are project managers, DLR Educational Consultants of Omaha, Neb. which is the architectural firm and Kurtz Construction of Rapid City who are the general contractors.

The expansion building houses high school classrooms, the high school administration, special education department, the bilingual program, library and commons area. The 60,044 square foot structure accommodates approximately 23 high school classrooms.

According to Hogan, the expansion project is experiencing a substantial shortfall amounting to $8.5 million and this has resulted in several planned features to be eliminated including kitchen facilities, gymnasium, administration building, bus maintenance and bus storage building.

Supreme court asked to see if boarding school abuse lawsuits to continue

SPEARFISH (AP) - Former students who allege they were sexually abused decades ago at two Native American boarding schools waited too long to sue the religious organizations that ran the schools, lawyers for the organizations told the South Dakota Supreme Court on Monday.

The students have failed to provide evidence that would entitle them to more time to file the lawsuits, lawyers for the Catholic organizations said as the high court heard arguments in two similar cases.

But the lawyer representing the former students said the lawsuits should be allowed to continue.

"When in doubt, all doubt should be resolved in favor of the victim," Gregory Yates of Encino, Calif., told the Supreme Court.The high court will decide the two cases in written opinions that will be issued later.

The two appeals involve conflicting rulings issued by two circuit judges.

At issue is a state law that requires a lawsuit seeking damages for childhood sexual abuse to be filed within three years of the alleged abuse or within three years of the time the victim discovered or should have discovered that an injury was caused by the abuse.

The legal battle started in 2003 when former students at Native American boarding schools filed a federal lawsuit seeking $25 billion from the federal government for the alleged mental, physical and sexual abuse of students at the schools. The boarding schools were run by religious organizations from the late 1800s or early 1900s until the 1970s, when most were closed or transferred to tribal control.

The federal lawsuit was dismissed, and the former students then filed two similar lawsuits in state court. The lawsuits allege that the religious organizations were negligent in hiring, retaining and supervising staff and failed to protect students.

Re-member board takes on KILI Radio as a project

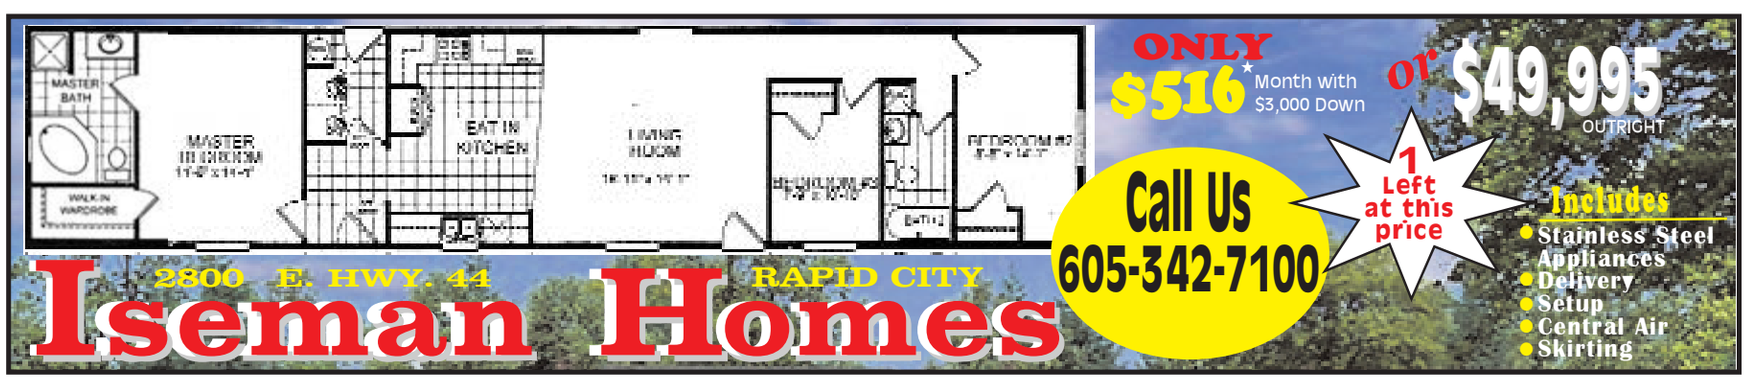
Volunteer program looks to move into home renovations

PORCUPINE BUTTE - "This has been a lot of fun," said Greg Slenk, president of the Board of Directors of Re-member, a volunteer organization that has been coming to Pine Ridge reservation for the last 10 years, "It's been a great three days, we've worked on weatherproofing KILI's roof, put on new gutters, replaced a water damaged ceiling, put in a new door, upgraded the deck and steps and solved the station's troublesome water pump problems."

Bright and early Monday morning, Slenk and five other board members, one wife and an intern showed up at Porcupine Butte to roll up their sleeves and take on some of the building and maintenance problems that had been piling up at the radio station located on the side of Porcupine Butte.

"Representatives from Re-member have been coming by the station for tours and to get information out over the last few years and a couple of years ago we volunteered to help with a poor run-off situation that allowed rainwater to leak into the station," said Slenk, "the board will choose a project that they would like to do and this past winter we decided to come to KILI and its been great."

Keith and Ginny Titus and Mike and Kathy Alles put together a non-denominational volunteer organization ten years ago to help coordinate volunteer crews coming to Pine Ridge to work on a variety of projects throughout the summer. Six years ago, using a three year commitment from 10 large churches, the organization purchased the old Lakota Studio east of Pine Ridge to be used as a lodging for volunteers and a bunk bed factory.



"Keith taught me about the word faith," said Greg, "for a long time it was just a word to me but today it is very real, we may have an important project but no money or human resources and then they are there, you have people stepping up to the plate, just like the commitment of ten churches to help us buy the building here. After building over a thousand bunk beds, we are now looking at moving into home renovation and repair, there is a lot of need here."

Board members and volunteers from the Holland, Mich. area helping on the KILI project included Slenk, Jim Robbert and his wife Millie, Phil Pratt, Ted Scantze, Barry Karlson, CJ Perkins and Dave Smith. Re-member donated the labor and the materials.

"They were just great," said Melanie Janis, station manager, I couldn't believe that this was the board of directors donating their time and expertise to help KILI, it was fantastic."

"Greg owns a lumber yard in Holland and he kept us focused and on task over the three days, it was a fun project," said Millie Robbert.

Another volunteer group, Honor the Earth, is getting ready to build a foundation for a 65KW wind turbine, the foundation is to be prepared and poured on Oct. 18 and 19 with the wind turbine set for installation on Nov. 8 and 9.

Boarding school lawsuits

The lawsuit involving St. Paul's School in Marty was filed in Sioux Falls. It seeks damages from the Catholic Diocese of Sioux Falls; Blue Cloud Abbey of northeastern South Dakota; Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, based in Pennsylvania; and Oblate Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament of Marty.

The second lawsuit, involving the St. Francis Mission School on the Rosebud Sioux Indian Reservation, was filed in Rapid City. It seeks damages from the Catholic Diocese of Rapid City; the Wisconsin Province of the Society of Jesus; and the Sisters of St. Francis, based in Denver.

In the Rapid City case, the Sisters of St. Francis argued that two former students waited too long to sue. Circuit Judge A.P. Fuller refused to dismiss the lawsuit, and the Sisters of St. Francis asked the Supreme Court to overturn the circuit judge's ruling.

But Circuit Judge Bradley Zell of Sioux Falls dismissed the St. Paul's School lawsuit, ruling that former students had waited too long to sue. Nine former students have asked the Supreme Court to reinstate their lawsuit.

Zell said the nine former students failed to present sufficient evidence to overcome the time limitations on filing such lawsuits. He said the nine had not demonstrated when, how and where they discovered a connection between the alleged abuse and their psychological and other injuries.

Sheila Woodward, a lawyer for the Sisters of St. Francis, told the Supreme Court on Monday that the Rapid City case should be dismissed because the two former students involved in the appeal knew about their alleged injuries more than three years before they filed their lawsuit.

Lloyd One Star wrote a letter in May 2001, more than three years before the lawsuit was filed, describing the alleged abuse and how that led to later problems with drinking and getting along with relatives, Woodward said.

"Mr. One Star, in that letter explicitly ties that abuse to his psychological injuries as an adult," she said.

Marian Sorace also discovered or should have discovered any connection between the alleged abuse and psychological problems during counseling in 1995, she said.

A reasonable balance must be struck between protecting the rights of alleged victims and those accused in lawsuits because it's difficult to determine what happened decades after alleged abuse, Woodward said. The lawsuit mentions two sisters at St. Francis, but one is dead and the other is about 80 years old, she said.

"Memories fade. People die. Documents are lost," she said.

Yates said evidence shows that neither One Star nor Sorace made a firm connection between the abuse and their psychological problems until later, which means they filed the lawsuit on time.

The filing of the federal lawsuit also gave them more time to file the lawsuit in state court, he said.

The former students also should get more time to go to court because the religious organizations concealed the abuse, Yates said.

However, Woodward said the students knew who worked at the St. Francis school and which organizations ran it. The students have never made specific allegations that Sisters of St. Francis threatened the students that God would punish them if they reported the alleged abuse, she said.

Yates said the Sioux Falls case should be reinstated because religious organizations involved with the St. Paul's School in Marty never raised the question of when the former students made a connection between the childhood abuse and their problems as adults.

Yates said the students never got a chance to argue the issue in circuit court because the issue was raised by the judge, not by the religious organizations.

"The way the plaintiffs look at this is this is a dismissal basically by ambush," Yates said.

But lawyers for the religious organizations said the issue of when the students made the connection between the abuse and their injuries was raised in circuit court. The students, however, did not file evidence to show they made the connection only within three years of going to court, they said.

Jeremiah Murphy of Sioux Falls, representing the Catholic Diocese of Sioux Falls, said St. Paul's School was run by Benedictine fathers, not by the diocese.

"The Diocese of Sioux Falls has never owned, operated or controlled St. Paul's," Murphy said.

Yates said the diocese should remain in the lawsuit because its bishop could approve or disapprove the teachers and other workers at the school.

Yates said the lawsuits should be allowed to continue so the former students are treated fairly. "There's no limitation on suffering the horrors of childhood sexual abuse."

Jerome LeBeaux selected as Red Cloud girl's coach

PINE RIDGE - Jerome LeBeaux has been named the 2007-08 girl's basketball coach at Red Cloud High School, school officials announced today. LeBeaux, is the son of well known basketball coach Dusty LeBeaux.

"I am very excited about joining the ranks of coaching," said LeBeaux. "The people at Red Cloud made the difference for me. The most exiting part is the positive vibe I received from the student-athletes about their desire to build something special together at Red Cloud, something we can be proud of. I am thrilled to have the opportunity to represent Red Cloud, the girl's basketball program, and the community."

LeBeaux resides in the Thunder Valley Community near Rockyford, SD and assisted in the founding of the Thunder Valley Tiospaye, a Community Development Corporation that works with youth on the Pine Ridge Reservation. The Thunder Valley Community House is a place for youth and young Lakota families to strengthen their cultural identity.

"Jerome is a proven winner who has a remarkable passion for and knowledge of the game," said Bob Brave Heart, Superintendent of Red Cloud Schools. "He is committed to the development of players away from the court as well as their improvement on it, which fits the Red Cloud's belief that our athletic program plays an important role in educating students for meaningful personal and professional lives. His enthusiasm is contagious, and we're thrilled that Jerome will lead our girl's basketball program."

LeBeaux credits his father as being one of the major influences in his pursuit of a career in coaching. LeBeaux, a 1995 Red Cloud High School Graduate, played on the 1995 Red Cloud High School Boys State Championship team, and was selected South Dakota's 1st All-State Team 1995 and was a finalist for the 1995 South Dakota's Mr. Basketball award.

"My desire to coach came from the many years of attending my father's practices and games," said LeBeaux. "I admired the relationships my father developed with his players and his discipline. I learned how to be successful the right way. It takes hard work and discipline."

Secretary of the Interior approves Rosebud Sioux secretarial election

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Sioux tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, issued a recent press release announcing that the Secretary of the Interior had followed suit and approved of the same 23 RST constitutional amendments that Sicangu voters had approved of in July. Four of the proposed amendments were turned down by voters. Bordeaux said, "This is the first time that our Tribe has gone through the Constitutional Convention process and the amendments proposed came directly from individual tribal members."

RST voters went to the polls on July 26 and history was made as it was the first time that the Sicangu oyate were able to draft their own proposed amendments. There was some controversy surrounding the process as some tribal members noted that some of the amendments were poorly written and redundant. A couple of amendments were vague and were supposed to have been clarified for tribal voters, however, that did not occur.

The Lakota Women for Change were instrumental in registering tribal members for the secretarial election and presenting a petition to the RST council that would ultimately make the constitutional convention a reality.

The LWC is comprised of attorney Vi Burnette, Lois Antoine, Marcella Prue, Pansy Schmidt, Dorothy Marshall and other Sicangu tribal members.

Bordeaux notes that the next step in the process will be for RST to amend the appropriate tribal law to reflect the approved amendments to the constitution.

Some of the more interesting approved amendments to the RST constitution are indicated.

Amendment A which proposed changing the name Rosebud Sioux to the Sicangu Nation failed by a modest margin, while amendment C which proposed changing the blood quantum for enrollment to three generations of lineal descent was approved by voters by a wide margin of 508 to 281 and with 17 spoiled ballots.

Amendment F proposed to change the length of term for the secretary and treasurer to two years, the length for council representative to three terms and limit the term for president and vice-president to two terms was approved by a margin of 459 to 339.

Meanwhile, amendment G proposed to change tribal council representation to one per community to be elected at large. The measure was approved by a margin of 538 to 258. At present some smaller communities are joined with other small communities and share a council representative.

Amendment I modified the qualifications for candidates and requires them to be of one-fourth or more Sicangu blood degree, at least 25 years old, not found guilty of any major crimes by any jurisdiction, etc. The amendment passed by a margin of 584 to 212 with 10 spoiled ballots.

Finally, amendment X changes the constitution to include a statement that "tribal employees or tribal members shall not be subject to unfair and political repercussions and/or retaliation by the President or any of his/her representatives in any matter."

President Bordeaux concluded his press release by saying, "I want to thank each of you tribal members who took this opportunity to vote on these amendments. Even though I may not agree with some of the amendments, I cannot change them, because it is the People's vote and choice, and I respect that."

Oglala Sioux councilman was detained in New Mexico on bust

RATON, N.M. - Don Garnier, an Oglala Sioux council representative from the Pine Ridge district was detained during a routine traffic stop on Interstate 25 in New Mexico a couple of weeks ago. He apparently was riding in a vehicle driven by Anthony Leo Vocu also of Pine Ridge according to a news article in the Rapid City Journal.

According to a search warrant affidavit, the vehicle's trunk allegedly contained a bag of marijuana and the FBI took over the case after the men had spent time in the Raton jail.

Norm Cairns of the U. S. Attorney's office in Albuquerque, N.M. said that no charges had been filed as of the Wednesday two days after they were detained. Garnier had been in New Mexico on official business to attend the opening of a casino.

The two men were arrested on the interstate highway on Sept. 19 when state troopers proceeded to check their registration, proof of insurance and licenses.

A new cadre of Lakota administrators on the Rosebud

By Archie B. Beauvais
Special to the Times

MISSION - Todd County High School principal, Victoria Sherman, is in her third year as the administrator at the school. She arrived on the Rosebud reservation by way of Oglala Lakota College in Kyle. As the community may recall, the 2006-2007 school year was a very challenging experience as two "lockdowns", suicides and bomb threats threatened the academic environment at the school. Sherman has likely gained some very valuable experience, the kind that is not taught in the college classroom, and with a little patience, this year promises to be a positive improvement over last.

For Lakota people who believe in self-determination, additional help has arrived on the Rosebud, also by way of Oglala Lakota College in the form of Lyle Iron Horn who has been hired by the school district as the assistant high school principal. Iron Horn calls Little Eagle home which is on the Standing Rock Reservation and was previously employed at Little Wound High School. He taught world history, geography, art, PE and health over the course of nine years. He earned his Master of Arts degree in educational administration in June at commencement exercises held at the Piya Wiconi center in Kyle.

Iron Horn, as assistant high principal at TCHS, is charged with the responsibility over the discipline concerns of students. He explained a new approach that the school is taking. He said, "We're getting away from punishment and going back to our roots; Punishment does not work. If one breaks a rule having to do with values, then it is re-taught to the student. We have identified the areas of disrespect, being AWOL, insubordination and detention."

Furthermore, Iron Horn says that when students are punished learning stops and they go into a resentment mode and their behavior gets worse. Catholic Social Services has also offered their services in the areas of anger management, self-esteem issues, conflict resolution and personal growth. He said, "We have school expectations for them. TCHS stands for Think responsibly, Come prepared, Have respect and Show self-control. The values they must follow are, respect others, follow directions, be on time, be polite and helpful, keep hands, feet, objects to yourself."

Barry Mann

Lyle Iron Horn

Being able to re-teach proper behavior and explain school expectations to students is at the center of the new approach which allows students time to become more cooperative and redeem their own bad behavior. For those who continue to face problems, they are sent for "tutoring" not detention sessions after school which can be anywhere from 15 to 60 minutes according to Iron Horn.

At St. Francis Indian School, Barry Mann, a 2005 graduate also of Oglala Lakota College has been employed as the high school principal since June. Mann, from the Marksville community on the Cheyenne River Sioux reservation in Eagle Butte was formerly the Dean of Academic Affairs at Si Tanka University. He said, "I would like to help make change for the kids and the community. Change attitudes of the some of the people about education. It is a key to being competitive and to retaining Lakota culture."

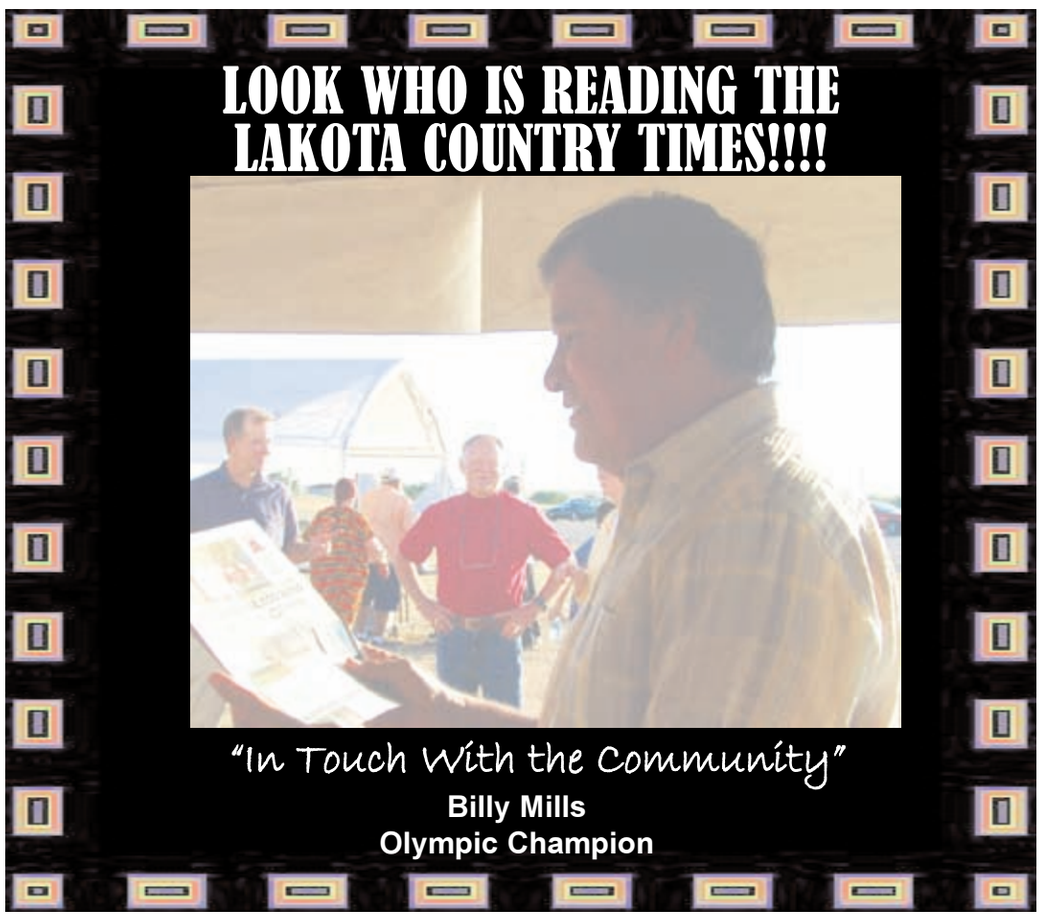
He also earned his Master of Arts degree in educational administration by attending OLC classes that were offered at the Si Tanka University campus. More recently he also taught a couple of graduate classes for OLC at the Eagle Butte campus.

Arriving in June allowed Mann to adjust to the demands of his new job and assist in moving into the new school building. In addition he said, "St. Francis has given me the opportunity to advocate for learning Lakota language and culture in a high school setting. Students have to have an identity. We're implementing Lakota values through all subjects. Both Indian and non-Indian teachers will show me how they are assessing that. If our children can make a connection with education they will come to school."

Previously, Mann also taught at the high school level in the Bureau of Indian Affairs for 16 years

All three administrators are fully certified by the state of South Dakota as education administrators.

Together, the three secondary administrators, along with Spring Creek elementary principal, Eustace Night Shield, represent a new cadre of Lakota education leaders on the Rosebud who will serve as positive role models. At a time when both school districts are striving to make positive gains in meeting the demands of the No Child Left Behind Act, most Lakota youngsters who see these education professionals in action will see the possibilities that exist when one is dedicated to earning their credentials.



In the education field at all levels it is well known that few males enter the teaching profession and that is especially true among Lakota people. At a time when a host of social issues are plaguing the community from declining Lakota language use, suicides, and high unemployment rates increasing the number of Lakota professionals to serve in such visible leadership positions will hopefully create some reflection about the need and relevancy of a quality education.

Our Views

Lakota Country Times

3 years of promoting Lakota spirit

A year ago in our editorial we said "Happy Birthday to "US" the Lakota Country Times! Today we celebrate yet another year and have added the third year and tier to our third anniversary cake.

Our history book is full of bittersweet stories that make us who we are. Who are we? We are an independently Lakota owned weekly newspaper and do what we do because we believe in the power of the pen. We are 'not' the Lakota-Dakota Journal. We are 'not' the People's News.

And we are NOT the 'old' Lakota Times, although a part of foundation in based on the philosophy of what made the Lakota Times and Indian Country Today successful - the belief that Indian press can be a tool to promote change.

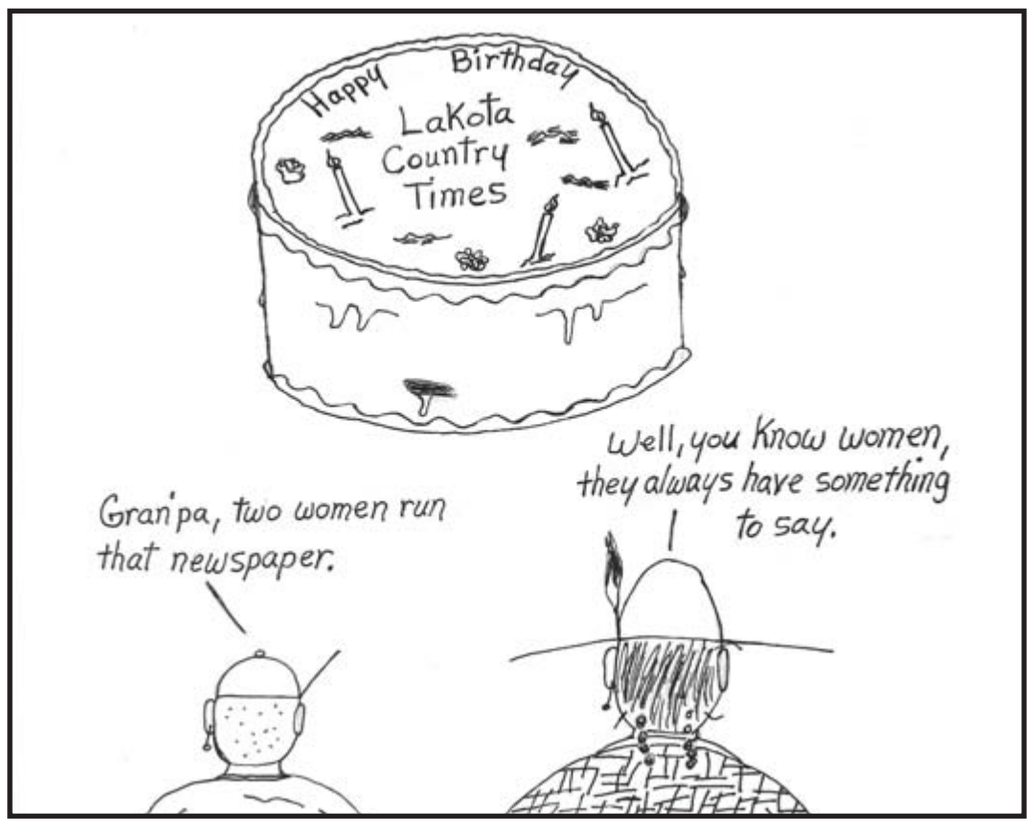
Lakota Country Times is produced each week by two Lakota women Amanda Takes War Bonnett and Connie Blanco and Manuel Blanco, all our contributing writers, photographers, advertisers and supporters.

The newspaper office is located in Martin, which is situated between the communities of Pine Ridge and Rosebud. We have an estimated 10,000 readers from our print edition and 6,000 readers from our online edition.

In our birthday message last year we said "we have endeavored to bring the news into as many Lakota homes as possible with as much energy and commitment as we are able to muster." Now that's who we are!

We are "where" we are because of our loyal writers, speakers, readers, clients, advertisers, friends, family, etc. etc. Without your support and generous natures we could not have withstood the past pages our history. Without them we could not have passed this third milestone. Without them we could not have mustered up the energy we need on a daily basis to remain the most well-read Lakota newspaper on both Pine Ridge and Rosebud and online.

Thank you everyone that believes in what we believe in, every Lakota elder, whether man or woman, and every child deserves to have positive, fair, and balanced news published in a Lakota newspaper that they can be proud to sit down and read with their family.



Thank you to those who believe, as we do, that our Family Literacy Project deserves to be made available by every school on and off these two reservation so that our newspaper can be mailed directly into the homes of students and parents.

Lakota people want to read and when they do, they want to read the 'real, positive' news of everyday life of Lakota country. People today are educated by books and by life. We hope that reading our paper helps people on their everyday journey and most important, helps them 'want' to read more! Isn't that what the schools and government are spending millions of dollars trying to do?

Letters to the Editor

The Lakota way of faith and belief is presented as a way of wo okahnige and wo wahwala

Dear Editor:

In its far-ranging expressions, the Lakota Way to mean also culture, philosophy and so on will now be communicated in the new standard of bilingual-biliterate speaking and writing in both English and Lakota. This will add breadth and depth in commenting about materials Lakota as heretofore Native American subject areas have been covered by English-only speakers and writers. To illustrate, I will bring out later a few sample errors in two books that I have reviewed just now. One is F*ools Crow, Wisdom and Power* by Thomas E. Mails and the other book is Red Earth, White Lies by Vine Deloria, Jr.

But now, a quick scan of a few areas of Lakota cultural manifestations will give you an impression of the complex culture which Lakota is and is yet to be.

In the area of numbers, arithmetic in base-10 is what the Lakota has in its abstract terms, the same as Hindu-Arabic numerals. Because settled agriculture was not developed to produce surpluses so that some persons could devote their time and energy to the study of numbers fulltime, mathematics is not developed but implied in Lakota numbers. I*yawapi, yuheyabicu, kiyukse, tonakigle* are the four operations addition, substraction, division and multiplication.

Going further into Lakota numbers development, algebra is the next step in using letters, for instance, in equations. Thus, the equation LS > ba very concisely and potently brings home the message that the Lakota Spirit is greater than beverage alcohol. When you nurture your spiritual being properly, it will give you strength to overcome any addiction, and you will find that alcohol and any other drug addiction is not the problem anymore. Alcohol and drug abuse represent weaknesses whereas the Lakota Spiritual Path epitomizes strength. The ceremonies and rituals of the vision quest, the sundance, and the purification lodge teach self discipline. But the most important thing which underlies and overflies all ritual and ceremony is your fluent Lakota language prayers for understanding, in thanksgiving to the Wakantanka Tunkasila in the sacred language.

The scientific 41-letter Titunwun Lakota alphabet since 1982 must be cited here as it is a pat of the total cultural embodiment of Lakota wicohan or ways. In the speaking and study of the Lakota, you will find four levels of understanding: the ognahca, the wiyacinipi, the ohanowotanla, and the waken which are translated roughly into English as literal, allegorical, moral and the anagoge. Most important in the 41 letters of Lakota is the scientific rule of one sound = one letter which is the phonemic system no other major alphabet in the world possesses.

But to go back and to point out why bilingual-biliterate expression is more efficient than monolingual writing, two by the two well-known authors mentioned. In both books are the misnomers uncounted but too many which are the indicators of monolingual writing. The cover for Mr. Mails book features the biggest misnomers of all-referring to Fools Crow as the "Ceremonial Chief of the Teton Sioux' and as "…the great Sioux Holy Man." Here, chief, teton, Sioux are not Lakota words at all. However, Fools Crow is not diminished in the native world by this type of fraud if redone in the new standard of bilingual biliteracy. The author is simply proselytizing as he is trained to do, as immature error of trying to convert others in faith and belief as it is in most of the so-called major religions.

This is nonolingual writing at its most inadequate tone as also made clearest Deloria's book P.3, "Much of Western science must go, all of Western religion should go…" Lakota would restate this way: even though narrowly focused on the physical away from the wholistic thus far, science as the imperfect quest for knowledge is here to stay. And in contrast to Deloria the Lakota language world view respects all religions on Unci Maka, Grandmother Earth and beyond. The Lakota spiritual religion is not interested in the socalled "missionary" work as practiced by others in great waste of time and energy. Other religions fail to understand the Lakota Way.

Thus, their arguments, debates and even religious wars have happened in history. The Lakota Way in matters of faith and belief is presented as a way of wo-okahnige and wo-wahwala -understanding and peace.

Lakota Version of a Guardian Angel

(Transalation of the above article.)

A Lakota Baby Boy was born and soon after he was taken to the Holy Man to be blessed and assigned to an animal to watch over him. This boy's name was Akicita Cikala (Little Soldier).

This little boy was instructed to be always aware that a Rabbit would be his guardian. The boy grew up to be a strong young man but never was in real danger. One day he decided to join a war party to prove his manhood. A few days into looking for the enemy to count coup and and steal some horses, they encountered their enemy. Before they had a chance to surprise their enemy they were attacked and heavily outnumbered. They decided to retreat. The enemy chased them and wounded Little Soldier.

He was shot and one side of his ankle was badly shattered. Two of his friends practically carried him but the enemy was closing in on them. Little Soldier was causing them to be in real danger of them all being killed.

So he made a courageous decision to be left behind. He said tell the folks back home I did bravely. They shook hands and left him.

By this time it was getting daybreak and a rabbit appeared out of nowhere then started talking to him.

The rabbit said, "Did you forget about me?" He then told the young warrior to kill him, skin the hide and cut it into strips and wrap it around his shattered ankle then see what happens. He followed the rabbits instructions and his ankle healed so he started jumping up and down on it and soon after he ran.

The warrior left behind to die at the hand of the enemy ran swiftly and in time caught up with his war party. This was a Lakota miracle by a guardian Angel.

Redskins and Rednecks

By Dr. Jim Wilson

Did that Headline get your attention? Good, because I have some information to share which could be very important to you, your children and your grandchildren. A world-wide social transformation has come to Siouxland and we all need to recognize and make our own respective plans and decisions on how we deal with it. As individuals we cannot change or stop it, but collectively we can influence it.

Have you noticed that there has been a dramatic shift in the weather? Seems like we just had the hottest summer ever here in Siouxland. The weather reminds me of the need to keep a broad-scale perspective. It was not our hottest summer ever, but coming after several hot (and dry) summers it is easy to forget the past (if we are old enough to have many notches on our belts).

Most of us are so involved in the daily affairs of our personal lives that we forget to stand back and look at the big picture.

Many of us leave the big picture stuff to others and as we read the newspaper or watch the evening news we mumble about "them or they." But it takes all of "us" to make up them and they.

Social Scientists have carefully documented cycles (called eras, waves, epochs, etc.) of social transformation such as the Stone Age, the Agriculture age and the Steel Age. We study mass movements and hope to anticipate the outcomes by looking for trends which, in turn, reflect similarities of actions by individuals. Some who specialize in this are called Futurists, like John Naisbitt (Megatrends), Marshall McLuhan (Understanding Media: The Extension of Man), Frank Feather (G Forces) and others. These eras are both sequential and progressive, meaning they come in sequences built on the technical foundations of the past and are progressive in that they reflect the social progress of mankind toward better living conditions. The time periods between changes are getting shorter and the range of differences between the least and most advanced is getting greater (like the newborn in Central Africa with nothing and Bill Gates with $60 billion).

McLuhan introduced the idea of the Global Village and many people laughed at him, yet today we casually participate in the Global Market. Look at your clothing and your appliances; nothing is made "at home." Of course you know that Europe has a 'Common Market' and uses a common money (the Euro). And, everybody, everywhere is learning English as the Common Language and struggling to earn the Common Money: the US Dollar.

Now, let's talk Redskins and Rednecks. A recent Rapid City Public Schools report tells us that 16 percent of its 13,000 student population is American Indian (2,080); only 1 in 6 will graduate.

An October 2003 survey of 343 families in three communities on Pine Ridge Reservation told us the average family had 4.18 members and a median age of 20.6 (3.6 and 34.5 respectively for South Dakota). Rapid City has about 18,000 households and a population of about 65,000 and figure 6 percent (3,900) are in college.

A Rapid City Journal article estimated the American Indian population of the city at 8 percent (5,200) with three percent in college (156), so at 4.18 per family we might have 1,244 American Indian families in Rapid City. Or, if you subtract 2080 students from the 5,200 you get 3,120 adults; at 2 adults per family you get 1,560 families. Now you have some numbers to work with.

Since we do not have any specifics to identify Rednecks, we'll just think of them as the 'Old Guard' who raised lots of kids who quit school in the 5th grade to hoe cotton and tobacco and raise more kids.

As the Rednecks moved to the cities they took the menial and entry-level jobs, lived in the low-rent and slum areas, and gathered on weekends in beer joints to argue about hunting, fishing, baseball and their pick-up trucks, hunting dogs and shotguns.

But, you know what?

Most of those Rednecks also served in the military, traveled far and wide and came home changed. While they were gone the city started to grow up also.

The Great Flood was the beginning of The Transformation. The Great Flood got rid of the slums and the beer joints (anybody remember Coney Island or The Cowboy Bar?). After the Great Flood came the Regional Hospital, the Civic Center, the Parkway, the Rushmore Mall and the Regional Airport.

The attempt to close Ellsworth Air Force base triggered a new spurt for Siouxland to join the Global Village.

The local effort brought eyes from around the globe to our region, and the people who came, heard and saw very much liked what they heard and saw. Plans and or action are underway for three new malls, a downtown high-rise and another Wal-mart Superstore.

Meanwhile back at the Rez (Pine Ridge) we have been busy robbing the tribal till, peddling dope, fencing the schools but not our prison, selling fireworks and starting fires, starving our sacred buffalo and wild horses, lining our highways with artifacts (wine bottles and beer cans), quitting school and revising our Charters, our Tribal Constitution (but electing and appointing the same people) and driving in caravans to Rapid City every weekend.

Are we Redskins trading places with the Rednecks? Am I ready to abandon my heritage?

No way!

What I am pointing out is that there is a natural human mass transformation taking place and it is coming to our homeland right now and we had better pay attention.

With the economic boom coming to our region we are also undergoing a mass social transformation; the "new" society is made up of Global Village people who do not focus on race, color or nationality.

The Global Village people are focused on making their lives better, healthier, freer and they want to live, work and play with other people who want the same things.

There will be over 10,000 new jobs in Rapid City, and thousands in nearby areas, in the next two years and they will go to people who are willing to start at their level of preparation and grow with the new businesses. The wise person will decide at which level they want to join and prepare for that level and walk in the front doors, or they will forever go to the back doors to carry out the trash or dig in the dumpsters.

The message is clear and I see American Indians in businesses all over town.

We have lawyers, accountants, business owners, teachers, politicians and many well-employed American Indians in the area and not one of them is complaining that somebody has taken away their culture.

As a matter of fact, it is evident that as we now see, productive, self-supporting people are actually better able to support and maintain their cultural interests.

So what do I see for the Rez? I see a giant park-like, eco-island in the upper Great Plains with the cluster housing converted to villages with trees, flowers, playgrounds, meeting halls, greenhouses, solar and wind farms scattered discreetly among man-made tree farms, community gardens, fish farms and small scale tourist centers where cultural events can be shared with the public.

And a cooperative commuter transportation system for those who may want to commute to jobs in the region, including Rapid City and other Black Hills locations. Docjims@aol.com.

A Sicangu Perspective

By Lydia Whirlwind Soldier

We must find ways to give hope and faith to our people

By Lydia Whirlwind Soldier

Today as I thought about the 32 deaths by suicide on our reservation I wondered if there was some way in which we could help those who are thinking of taking their own lives. I certainly am not an expert when it comes to analyzing and giving advice to those who need help. I know there are many concerned people who have formed support groups to find solutions. As tribal people we are attempting to work together to try to help those who are in a desperate and despondent state.

In times past, Lakota kinship laws kept our children safe and secure and it was the obligations of adults to work together to make sure that support was available to those in need. I have heard people say, "Suicide is a permanent solution to a temporary problem." This may be true in some instances but as we all know in some instances it is not a temporary problem. This situation has been a long time coming with family breakdown and the loss of Lakota kinship laws. Some of these family problems have come down for several generations. In times past, children, teens or whoever needed support and advice had their grandparents, parents, aunts, uncles and cousins to rely on. It is harsh reality that many of us have lost our grandparents, and some parents are unavailable because of addictions.

It is shameful to say some aunts and uncles are not the disciplinarians as they once were, instead they are contributing to the problems by drinking with their nieces and nephews.

Many families have lost their kinship knowledge and many children do not even know their own relatives. I remember once a wasicu saying to me, "You Lakota are related to everyone!"

A statement that was intended to put me down instead it made me very proud. I wonder how many parents are actually teaching their children about relatives and are promoting good relationships with relatives. These are important support system that the Lakota recognized to make life meaningful. These are not harsh criticisms, Mitakuyepi but they are Lakota teaching that I learned as a child.

There are other Lakota teachings such as fortitude that we are not passing on to our children. Many of us would not be here if the value of fortitude was not instilled in our ancestors.

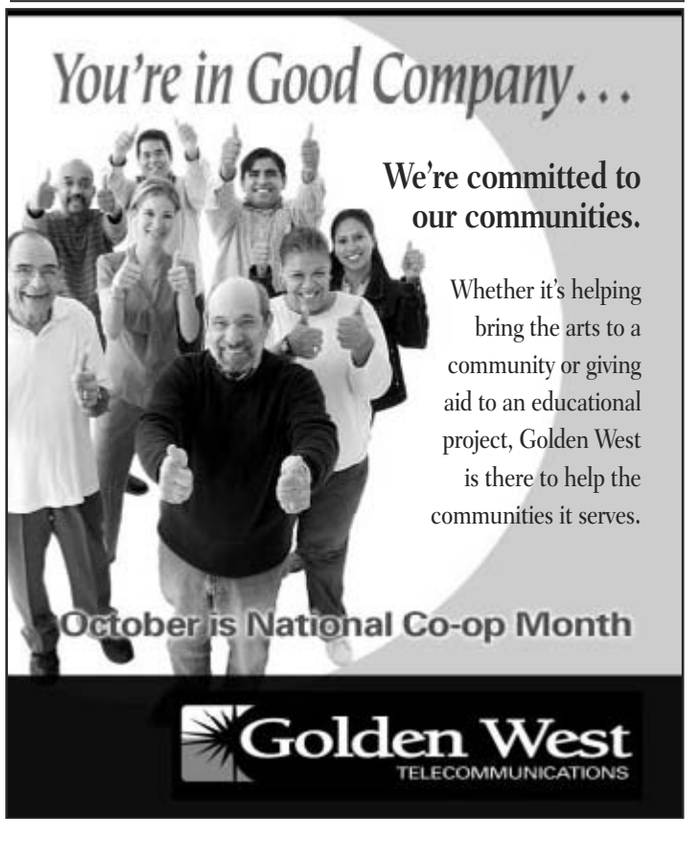
We as a people have traveled a difficult and perilous journey. There have been many losses for us, such as starvation, massacres, loss of land, losses too numerous to count yet our ancestors continued on with the prayer, "Oyate ki nipi kta ca le camu." "I do this so our nation will live." Fortitude was instilled in teachings to every child, every child was told, "Remember you are Lakota, you must have courage, strength and endurance in difficult and pain filled situations. You must never give up." Because of this teaching many foreigners meeting the Lakota for the first time thought of them as being arrogant but in reality the Lakota knew that they had come through difficult times and were strong enough to take on more. The Lakota saying, "Nake nula waun." showed the pride that the Lakota were ready for any tribulations placed in their path.

Grief is a normal and natural response to death. We are ill equipped to help those who struggle with grief and struggle for reasons to live. Yet, we exacerbate reasons for people to be depressed and contribute to the fixation or preoccupation with death. We began to wonder why our relatives who have gone on are being called back over and over to see the grief and misery their death has caused. Every morning the airways are filled with song requests and dedications on KINI for those who may have been gone for many years. We see names of the dead written on car windows, weeks and even months after they died. There is a time and place for everything. These behaviors are understandable with a recent death. There is nothing wrong with the tradition of honoring our dead but when we hear over and over, monthly, yearly, dedications we began to wonder if these people who have gone on had this much attention when they were alive. When we think of relatives who have gone on we all wish we had done things differently, or better or even more.

Our Lakota traditions teach us that when we lose a loved one it is a time for personal spiritual development and strength. I feel that some people have lost that tradition. I know what grief is. I experienced it when my 13-year-old daughter died in a car accident, I thought I would die. I couldn't eat or sleep or even get out of bed at times. My mother brought a medicine man who talked to me about the Lakota way of dealing with death.

He told me to think of my daughter and what she would want for me. He told me I was keeping her here. She was alone with my grief. I had to let her go. I know that I didn't want her to be alone; I wanted her to join her relatives who loved her and who were waiting for me to let her go. He told me to think of all the good she could teach me. What were her best qualities that I needed to develop in myself? And sure enough I thought about her humor and her patience - two things that I needed to develop in myself. It was a difficult time. It took me a long time but I knew I could no longer wallow in my own grief and in my own loss. Instead I had to think of her spirit and be grateful for what she contributed to my life. I think of her in my prayers and at Sun dances. I think of her when I see her friends and I wish them well. I am grateful for their friendship and the happiness they brought to my daughter.

I am grateful for all the happiness she brought to my life but I needed the reminder that I had to let her join her relatives in the spirit world.



Mitakuyepi, tehicilapi. My words are not to hurt anyone. I am hoping that we find some ways to help those who struggle with life. These are difficult times. There are too many unnecessary deaths.

Let your relatives find reasons to live and let go of those who are not here. Let them join the relatives who love them and who are waiting for them. Appreciate those living and treat them with honor and respect while they are still with us.

Do good things in their name, encourage them and be there for them when they need you. I am sad that people think that life is not worth living. There are reasons for us to be here, it may even be just to learn patience, humor and appreciation for life - we are here for a reason. Family and the support we receive from friends are some of the greatest gifts we can give to each other. We must find ways to give hope and faith to our people.

Dead men on paper and metal

Wanblii Ake Glii

As a cashier at a gas station, I deal with thousands of dollars a day. Selling everything from snacks and drinks to cigarettes and gas, it's a never ending cycle of passing wads of sweaty cash and sticky coins back and forth. The pay isn't that great, minimum wage, but it is a job. I've worked at a couple other gas stations throughout my life so starting my third stint at another one was like making a fire. It's just simple adding and subtracting, $1s, $5s, $10s, $20s, and, pennies, nickels, dimes, and quarters and that's when it hit me. I was handling pictures of dead men on pieces of green paper and metal.

I don't know about all the presidents in history, but I do know about most of the ones that are on the common coin and dollar. And I do know what they did to our ancestors, and how they viewed them. Two of the founding fathers, Washington and Jefferson, and three later presidents, Jackson, Lincoln and Roosevelt all have their faces on American money. Their individual terms in office placed throughout presidential history may serve as a hint to the opinions of the other not so known presidents and their thought of Indians. It's something America does not like talking about.

On the one dollar bill and quarter, the so called father of this country and the first president of the United States was a slave trader and owned almost 500 slaves. Many a time he bought and sold Indian land without their permission because he thought it was his right. He later came to be president by gaining recognition from the nation as he rode through Indian communities butchering men, women and children in the thousands. Thomas Jefferson pictured on the nickel and the two dollar bill is another slave holding forefather and also known as a great philosopher for freedom. He more than a few times talked and wrote about the complete extermination of Indians to purify the Americas. Jefferson, who also wrote the Declaration of Independence, refers to us as "merciless Indian savages" saying Indians kill white people of all ages and both sexes without regard.

Andrew Jackson, on the twenty dollar bill, is probably one of the sickest presidents to run the country in his time, after the massacre of Horse Shoe Bend in 1814 he and some of his troops peeled the skin off the backs of slain Indians. The skin was to be cut in strips, dried and later made into bridle reins for horses. He also saw to it that anything able to be cut from a corpse was to be given "to the ladies of Tennessee" as battle field trophies.

Abraham Lincoln, on the penny and five dollar bill, was not that bad of a guy considering he fought against slavery, but just two days before he was to end slavery he thought nothing about signing an order to hang 38 Indians for the Dakota War of 1862 (also known as the Great Sioux Uprising). He never looked into the fact that agents for the U.S. were stealing the money the Government had promised to pay the Indians for the land they took. It resulted in the guilty pointing the finger at the innocent to be executed. Had Lincoln looked into the situation he would've known the Sioux were starving, but this was at a time when Indians were lesser than animals to the white man.

Lastly and certainly not least, is Theodore Roosevelt, the 26th president who is immortalized on the ten cent dime. Teddy was a firm believer in Manifest Destiny, a belief that god had given all of the Americas to the white man, and it was up to him to clear the way. He burned more Indian treaties than any other president in American history, by turning Indian lands that were once agreed on between the United States and the Indian nations, into National Parks and Forests. He believed Indians didn't know how to use land in a useful way, so it should be given to the white man instead.

Not only are the faces of these men on money, four of them are also engraved in stone at Mt. Rushmore in South Dakota. One ironic thing about this presidential memorial is it's said to represent the first 150 years of U.S. history. I think they got that right. Another ironic factor is that the man, who chose and sculpted these four presidents, was a member of the Ku Klux Klan. But what is the most ironic, if not tragic, is that while these dead presidents on paper and metal are responsible for the genocide of our people, we could not survive in this world without them. Or could we?

Anson Black Calf, Sicangu/Navajo, is 27-years old and temporally lives in southern California with his wife Angelina and child. Every summer, he comes back to Lakota country to be a part of the renewing ways. Soon his family plans to make South Dakota their home.

Notes From Indian Country

Native American Day came without a shot fired

By Tim Giago

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

When Columbus Day comes around each year there is consternation in the Native American community across America. Columbus Day parades, particularly the one held in Denver, CO., are disrupted by militant American Indians. On some Indian reservations black armbands are worn to recognize what the indigenous people consider a "day of infamy."

But who would have "thunk" that in a state Indian activists called "The Mississippi of the North" in the 1970s, would be the only state in the Union that does not celebrate Columbus Day, but instead celebrates "Native American Day."

How could such a state, condemned by activists for years, have risen above the fray and distinguished itself as a leader in white/Indian relations? The credit must go to the power of the Indian press.

Let me explain. In 1990 a young man named Birgil Kills Straight (that's right, Birgil with a B) decided to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the Massacre at Wounded Knee by leading a contingent of Lakota riders on the trail that Sitanka (Big Foot) and his followers took on their way from the Cheyenne River Reservation to the Pine Ridge Reservation after hearing of the murder of Sitting Bull. The 7th Cavalry, George Armstrong Custer's old outfit, caught up with them at Wounded Knee Creek and on December 29, 1890, they opened fire on the mostly unarmed Lakota men, women and children, murdering nearly 300 innocent civilians.

Kills Straight, a highly educated Lakota man, felt that this would be an opportune time to commemorate and honor the victims of the massacre. But he took it one step further and decided to hold a Lakota ceremony called, "Wiping away the tears." After the riders reached the sacred burial grounds of the victims at Wounded Knee the ceremony would be held to reach across the barriers of racial intolerance and in essence, extend a hand of peace and forgiveness to the white race.

I saw this as an opportunity to extend that message in a column I wrote directed at then Governor George Mickelson (R-SD). I challenged him to use this commemoration to not only proclaim 1990 as a Year of Reconciliation between Indians and whites, but to also use it as a time to set aside Columbus Day and to rename that day Native American Day. My editorial also asked the governor to honor Martin Luther King Jr. by making his birthday a state holiday.

Gov. Mickelson accepted my challenge in a letter to my newspaper, The Lakota Times. Lynn Hart, a Lakota/African American, read my editorial on the floor of the South Dakota Legislature.

Hart was making an effort to have the state declare the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr., a state holiday. Well, we ended up getting all three. The state legislature voted unanimously to make1990 a Year of Reconciliation, to replace Columbus Day with Native American Day, and to make Martin Luther King's birthday a state holiday.

All of these things were accomplished without a single shot being fired, without a single arrest being made, and without the occupation of a single building. They were accomplished because of the truth of an old adage, "The pen is mightier than the sword."

But it took a courageous governor and a strong and determined legislative body to stand behind the proclamation of Gov. Mickelson and make 1990 a Year of Reconciliation, and to support the legislation replacing Columbus Day with Native American Day and of making the birthday of Martin Luther King Jr., a state holiday.

The Lakota Times was a free and independent weekly newspaper that was born on the Pine Ridge Reservation a few years after the occupation of Wounded Knee. It stood alone in its efforts to bring truth and unbiased reporting of the news to the reservation. In its formative years it withstood firebombs, it withstood having its windows blasted out with shotguns three times, and it withstood assaults upon my family and me. And in the end, my editorial in the Lakota Times helped to create a new state holiday and to set aside the holiday most Native Americans found distasteful. South Dakota is the only state out of 50 that has moved to create a Native American Day to honor its largest minority.

On Nov. 10, 2007 I will be the first Native American ever inducted into the South Dakota Newspaper Hall of Fame and I hope it will open the door for the many other hard-working Indian newspaper editors and journalists to follow.

(Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, was born, raised and educated on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard in the Class of 1991 and founder of The Lakota Times and Indian Country Today newspapers. Taking a risk with the language

A recent story revealed that there are approximately 7,500 languages worldwide and about every two weeks one is being lost. Some of those listed as endangered include Native languages in Oklahoma and in California.

That is a sad and startling statistic as language is the one unique cultural gift that distinguishes a society from all of the ethnic societies of the world. I heard a tribal member from the Kul Wicasa Oyate in Lower Brule say that the numbers that speak Lakota are but a handful and that is equally as regrettable. I hope that it is an issue that is being addressed by those in the community and schools as the time has arrived to reclaim and preserve that which is very complex and beautiful.

On the Rosebud, we are fortunate that there are many middle aged to the elderly who can carry on a conversation or present an issue to the tribal council and do it all in Lakota. I have heard a number of people do that during the secretarial election and I was duly impressed. It is at times like that that I pay attention to new words that I might hear that are not regularly heard. What I do is write the word out phonetically and then, practice saying the word. I might even see if it is a dictionary somewhere, but most of the time I trust my own intuition and am able to gauge the context from which the word came.

I have a sense of the number of speakers we have who are engaged in preserving Lakota and we want them to continue their efforts so that we can continue to keep our youngsters familiar with the sound of Lakota. I enjoy Everett "Butch" Felix and Jim Clairmont each year as they emcee the annual Rosebud Fair and invariably I learn something new. Last year, Jim used the word ihank ehan and I quickly picked up on it and asked around and found out what it meant.

Another word which I have heard lately is iyuha kani and I gather that it simply means 'all of you.' I had not heard the ending very often and having heard it more lately I got to thinking about the word and its proper use in a sentence.

I think that in order to learn Lakota, it takes that kind of quiet reflection and word study when we hear a new word or one that is not used very often. Yet, another issue that I face is that I can read Lakota wonderfully and I have the KINI radio commercials I have recorded for the Lakota Country Times to prove it. However, I am not very spontaneous when it comes to speaking in public, although I can chit chat with people like Jesse Clairmont on a private basis.

I'm working at fluency, however, and am fortunate to have some wonderful intact Lakota speakers all around me yet. I often talk to Roy Spotted War Bonnett or Phil Two Eagle and if I don't switch to Lakota like I do quite often, they will continue to address me in Lakota and that practice is so very valuable to me.

There are numerous Lakota people my age who can understand Lakota very well, but will not take the risk of speaking it in a public setting and I hope we can all work to promote such speaking and overcome the shyness or whatever it is that we feel when we are self-conscious.

I enjoy studying the dynamics of language interaction and what it is exactly that occurs when two or more people share language. I have this theory that Lakota language transmission is dependent upon what we look like and who we are. As educators and language teachers we need to pay attention to those dynamics. Such things are important as we work to teach youngsters Lakota as they are very sophisticated themselves and are able to pickup on any skepticism, racism or class differences as we strive to work with them.

Another words, as we transmit Lakota to young people, we need to leave our prejudices and biases behind as they may show through when we are attempting to build a rapport and show them the value of Lakota language acquisition and maintenance.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (Sicangu) earned his Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University. A decorated Vietnam Veteran, he is functionally fluent in Lakota and currently works in Lakota language preservation for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. As the Chair/Dean of Education and Tribal Studies at Sinte Gleska University for 20 years he was able to continue his work as a student of the Lakota language.

Mustangs bounce back in second half to put down Thorpes 26-6

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

KYLE - The Pine Ridge Thorpes came to town and threatened to rain on Little Wound's Homecoming Parade leading 6-0 at the half; Little Wound finally started to jell in the third and fourth quarter outscoring the Thorpes 26-0 to win their fourth game of the year 26-6 over Pine Ridge.

Pine Ridge scored their first touchdown of the year as Harley Cortier scored from the three yard line on a quarterback sneak midway through the first quarter, the run for two failed but the Thorpes had taken advantage of a botched snap on a punt to recover the ball on the Little Wound four yard line and even though it took four downs to hit pay dirt in the end zone, Pine Ridge had their first score of the year and the only score of the game by either team in the first half to lead 6-0 at the half. Both teams combined for a total of 11 turnovers, six in the first half as Little Wound struggled to get anything going.

Jacey Mesteth, a 6'1" 170 pound junior fullback finally got things rolling for the Mustangs early in the third quarter with a four yard run for a touchdown, the two point run failed but Little Wound was on the board and had tied up the score. Trin In The Woods, junior quarterback, hit Brett Thunder Hawk on a 19 yard strike early in the fourth and the Mustangs were up 12-6. In the Woods scored on a one yard quarterback keeper and gave the Mustangs an 18-6 lead. Brice Hornbeck pulled down a 32 yard In The Woods pass for a touchdown and Skyler Hunter ran for the two point conversion to finish up the scoring and polish off a 26-6 win over Pine Ridge.

Once Little Wound got rolling, they showed some balance as Kevin Hunter carried the ball 17 times for 101 yards, Brice Hornback caught four passes for 103 yards and a TD and In The Woods completed five of 11 passes for 120 yards and two touchdowns. For Pine ridge, Cortier finished with four completions out of 11 attempts for 28 yards and three interceptions. Joe Bissonette carried the ball seven times for 27 yards.

"We struggled in the first half, we just couldn't put anything together," said Darrell Hunter, Little Wound coach, "but the strength of this young team is they don't hang their head or get down on themselves, they just keep working hard."

Brice Hornbeck and Melissa White Eyes were named 2007 Homecoming Royalty. Winners of the Little Wound Homecoming Parade included: Most Humorous-1) Isaiah Little White Man, 2) Susan Big Crow, 3) Sophomore Class, 4) The Goats; Most Traditional-1) Francine Poor Bear, 2) Bull Bears, 3) Middle School Lakota class; Most Spirited-1) Medicine Root District, 2) LWS Football Team, 3) Junior Class and Most Beautiful-1) Senior Class.

Little Wound is now 4-1 and travels to Hot Springs on Friday; Pine Ridge is 0-5 and travels to St. Francis on Friday night.

Brice Hornbeck runs back a punt against Pine Ridge on Friday with Emerson Bob Tail Bear (22) and Mike Wilson (42) giving chase. Casey Montileaux (42) pulls down a Harley Cortier interception as the ball just went over the top of Ezra Zephier's (84) outstretched hands during Friday's Little Wound Homecoming win over Pine Ridge.

Twiss top local finisher in State A golf

MILBANK - For the second straight year, Mike Twiss, a Red Cloud junior, was the top local finisher in the State A golf tournament. This year Twiss shot an 88 and 86 on Monday and Tuesday at the Pine Hills Golf Course in Milbank to finish in 28th in the state tourney.

Little Wound's Josh Mousseau, a senior, finished the two day State A competition with a 90 and 92 for a 182 total and a tie for 47th. Montana Sierra, a Red Cloud sophomore scored a 100 and an 88 for 188 and a tie for 57th, Joe Keith, Pine Ridge had a 100 and 99 for 199 and a tie for 86th; Alex Prue, a sophomore at Todd County shot 103 and 102 and his 205 was good for a tie for 93rd and Eric Long, Pine Ridge, shot 106 and 111 for a 217 and a tie for 100th.

Rainey Reynolds, Sioux Falls Christian, Ben Heller, Aberdeen Roncalli and Alex Schaack, Vermillion all tied for low scores with 156. Sioux Falls Christian's Mike Rozenboom was fourth at 160 and five were tied for fifth.

Vermillion defeated Aberdeen Roncalli 643-659 for the team title, SF Christian's 675 was good for third, West Central at 689 was fourth and Harrisburg with 690 was fifth.

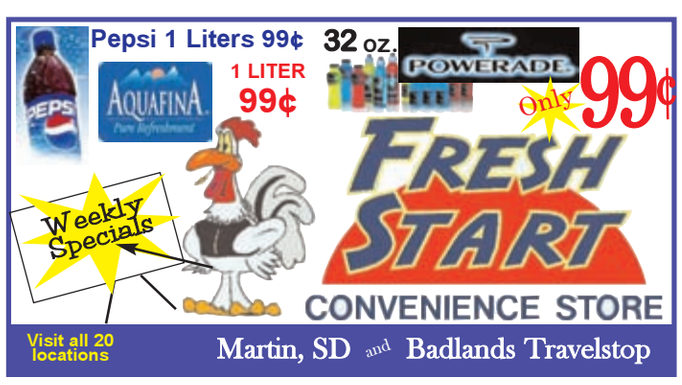
A total of 14 teams and 106 golfers competed in this year's State A golf tournament in Milbank. Golfers from Red Cloud, Little Wound and Pine Ridge did not have the luxury of having a golf course in their town and had to drive 40-60 miles a day to practice on courses located in communities off the reservation.

Falcons pounce on St. Francis 50-0

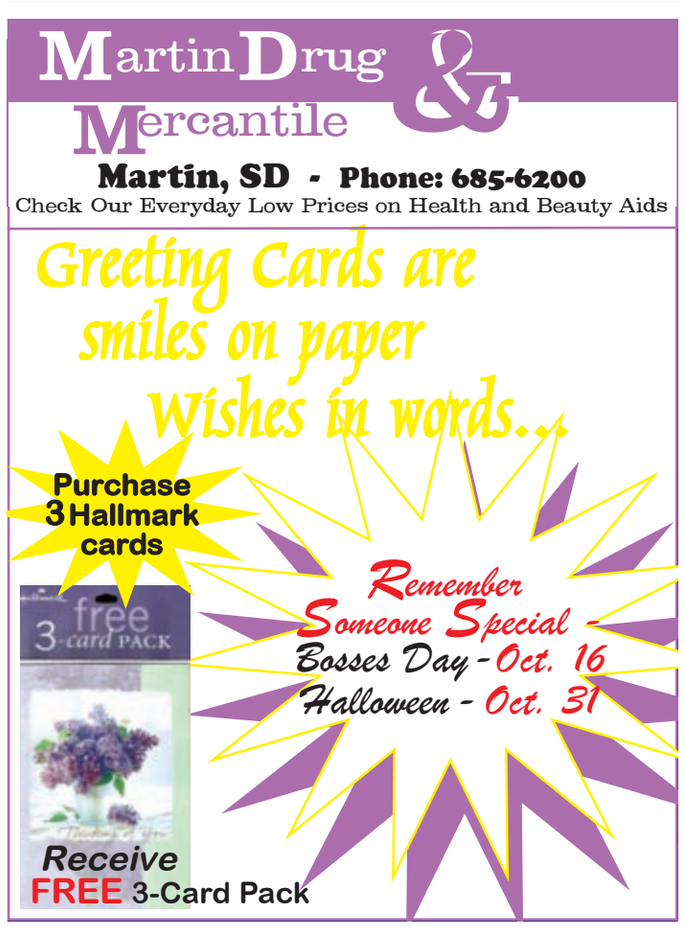
MISSION - Todd County overcame an early injury to Gunner Krogman, their senior team leader on offense and defense, to score 37 first quarter points and roll over St. Francis 50-0 Friday night in Mission.

Aaron Stoddard, a 6'1" senior linebacker, rumbled 42 yards down the field for a touchdown after intercepting Earl Peneaux's pass early in the first quarter; Gunner Krogman's kick made it a quick 7-0. Noah Kilonzo pulled down a 59 yard pass from CJ Spotted Tail for another quick Falcon touchdown, Krogman's kick made it 14-0. Krogman added a four yard run and a kick for a 21-0 lead.

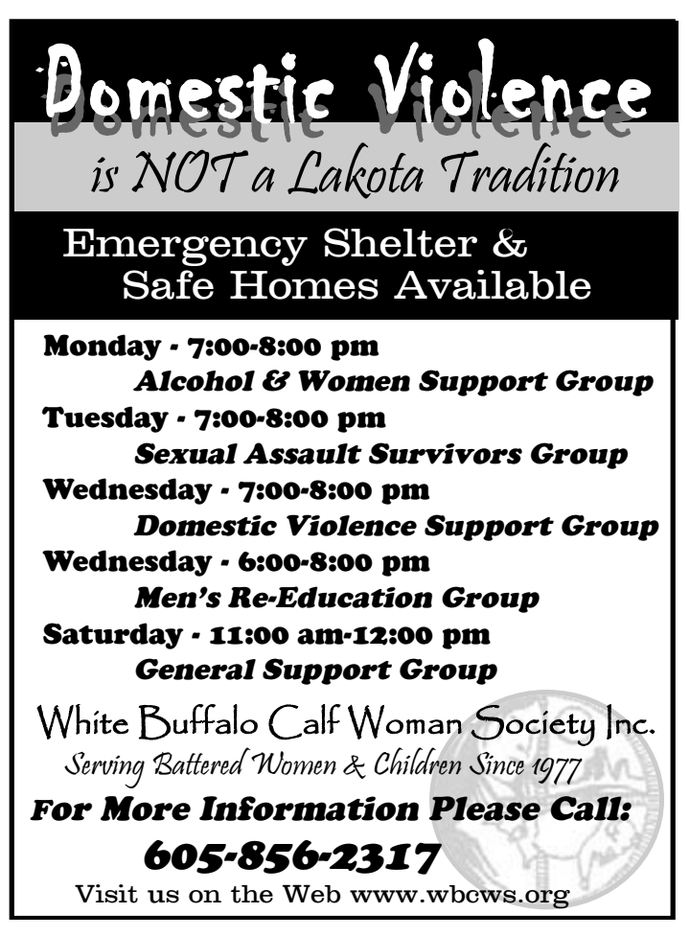
Canku One Star turned in a nifty 23 yard run for a TD and ran it in for two then Mike Neiss turned in a 48 yard punt return for a TD and Spotted Tail hit Jaden Allen for two to give the Falcons a 37-0 lead after one quarter.



Todd County added a Spotted Tail 13 yard run for a TD in the second quarter and a Neiss 81 yard kickoff return for a TD to open the third quarter and end the game.



Neiss finished with three carries for 73 yards, One Star had nine for 42 yards, Spotted Tail two for 29 yards, Stoddard two for 13 and Krogman four for 26. Spotted Tail was three of four passing for 69 yards. Kilonzo caught one pass for 59 yards and Allen caught two for nine yards. Todd County's defense held Peneaux to one completion in nine attempts for nine yards and two interceptions.



Todd County is now 4-1 and will travel to Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Friday while St. Francis is 0-5 and will host Pine Ridge Friday night.

Little Jewels eatery provides healthy Native food

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Alaskan sockeye salmon, crab cakes, sweet potato fries, whole-grain breads, bison burgers- there's more variety to traditional Native American food than frybread and Indian tacos, according to Angela Sharpe, who this summer opened Little Jewels, a Native American eatery.

All that variety can also be healthy. Traditional foods can be prepared with beneficial fats, no trans fat, and balanced nutrients, to result in a diet that fights heart disease, diabetes, and hypertension, Sharpe said.

Yes, Little Jewels does offer frybread and Indian tacos, but the dough is made with whole-wheat flour, and it's fried in grapeseed oil.

To accompany the frybread is wojapi, a fruit sauce made from plums or berries, and the combination tastes like a healthy jelly donut.

The Indian tacos are made with bison meat and Anasazi beans, which Sharpe said have more fiber and taste and fewer uncomfortable aftereffects than pinto beans.

Sharpe, an accountant who moved to Rapid City from Seattle in June, is president of Little Jewels, a corporation that so far consists of the little café and some big dreams. Sharpe wants to open an upscale restaurant, start a recreation center for kids, and create an energy bar.

"I always knew I would open a business in Indian Country," Sharpe said.

Sharpe said she has been part of corporate America for thirty years, but the idea for the restaurant sprang forth from family roots. Her mother loved to cook, and recipes have been handed down through generations. Based on family tradition, Sharpe has created an orange juice marinade for buffalo meat and uses Hopi and Navaho spices, as well as chipotle and jerk.

Angela Sharpe, opened Little Jewels to promote healthy Native foods. The wojapi is made with fruit and a tapioca base and the bread fried with grapeseed oil.

Vincent Thunder Hawk, Sicangu, and head cook James Logan have designed some of the menu.

Jewels employee Kim Brave Eagle-Daniels.

The name for the business comes from lyrics her mother used to sing to her, Sharpe said. In the song, children are little jewels, the stars in the sky making the creator's crown.

Sharpe said she plans foods for balanced nutrition and health benefits. Much of the food is spicy, because red pepper is good for blood pressure and digestion. Antioxidants are found in blueberries used in wojapi and in vegetables from the cabbage family included in all salads, she said.

Each meal is balanced with carbohydrates and protein, Sharpe said.

Every day Little Jewels features a noon special for $6. On Friday, it was chicken tortilla soup with a side salad and Hopi blue cornbread.

Employee Vincent Thunder Hawk said head cook James Logan likes to go through recipe books and find interesting dishes. The meals are made from scratch, Thunder Hawk said.

Not all the food is healthy- ice cream, pop, commercial baked goods, bacon, eggs, cheese, and sausage are on the menu too.

Little Jewels has a small dining area, with just one table for four people and a counter lining the walls, with stools for seating there.

The café also caters events, such as Anne White Hat and Winona LaDuke's reception to raise funds and awareness for preservation of Bear Butte, held at Prairie Edge on Saturday, Sept. 29. For that event, Little Jewels staff prepared chicken breast strips with a habanera marinara, bison meatballs, a vegetable tray, skillet bread, and chokecherry wojapi.

The eatery is open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m., Monday through Friday, and from 8 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Saturday. Little Jewels is located in the strip mall on the northwest corner of the intersection of Anamosa and Haines Ave.

Red Cloud de-rails Rangers 58-8

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

HILL CITY - Balance was the order of the day as Red Cloud used a strong running game mixed with their best passing game of the year to knock off the Hill City Rangers Friday night 58-8.

Red Cloud marched down the field on the legs of Billy Scott and got on the board with a one yard TD plunge by Lester Gotheridge; Scott ran for the two point conversion to make it 8-0. Hill City started their first offensive series from the own 20 and Chance Clason, a 145 pound sophomore running back, ran straight ahead on their first play from scrimmage bounced off Red Cloud's defensive line, kept his feet and rolled out around the left end hustling down the sidelines for an 80 touchdown run; Colton McLaughlin passed to Quint Wooldridge for two and that quick, the score was tied at eight apiece.

Jeremy Blacksmith, Red Cloud's sophomore quarterback sandwiched three first half touchdown passes around a Scott seven yard TD run in the first half. Blacksmith hit Christian McGhee for an 11 yard TD pass, Billy Scott for a 29 yard TD pass and Dave Giago for a 28 yard TD pass. Scott, Gotheridge and Wade O'Bryan ran for two points and Giago topped off the first half scoring with a 36 yard run for a touchdown to give the Crusaders a 44-8 lead at the half.

Both teams combined for three straight turnovers to open the second half as Scott finally turned a McLaughlin pass into an interception and runback for a 29 yard touchdown with two minutes gone in the third; Carl Swallow ran for two and it was 52-8. With 3:06 left in the third quarter, freshman Dominick LeBeau zipped around the right end and ran 80 yards for a game ending touchdown and a 58-8 final score.

"We have been working all year to get some balance between the running and passing game," said first year head coach, Keith Ferguson, "Friday night Blacksmith had good protection and success in finding the open receiver and Scott had another strong game on the ground, our offense scored four TD's on the ground and three through the air and the defense chipped in one as well, balance I like that."

Scott finished with 14 carries and 129 yards and a touchdown, one catch for 29 yards and a touchdown and an interception and a 29 yard runback for a touchdown. Blacksmith finished five of eight for 125 yards and three touchdowns with one interception. Giago had one 28 yard catch for a touchdown and a 36 yard run for a touchdown. Gotheridge finished with three carries for ten yards, a touchdown and a two point conversion and recovered a fumble only to have a teammate going for the same fumble hit him in the back. A trip to the hospital determined he suffered a deep bone and muscle bruise in the pelvis area.

After losing their first game, Red Cloud has won four in a row and is 4-1, they will host Crow Creek on Friday at 3pm. Hill City hosts Stanley County Friday night.

PINE RIDGE RESERVATION'S VISION FOR LONG-RANGE LAKOTA LANGUAGE GOALS

Oceti Wakan, a small non profit organization located in the Calico Community, received a small ANA grant to research the health of the Lakota Language on the Pine Ridge Reservation. We have shared our findings through community meetings and by publishing these results in the local newspapers. The second part of the grant served to collectively develop our long-term language goals. Now, in order to achieve these goals, we must focus on them. Because of the small percentage of children (less than 5%) ages 0 to 17 able to speak Lakota, we realize we must work together to accomplish this or the Lakota language will be lost.

Following are the goals:

All Lakota speaking people must make a spiritual commitment to speak only Lakota to all infants and toddlers as they naturally develop their language skills. The English will come naturally as they have many relatives that only speak English. Our goal is for them to learn two languages by the time they start school. In 41% of all households there is at least one person that speaks Lakota. Just this one effort would make a huge difference toward saving the language.

Work towards the goal of immersion schools starting at Head Start level. We are very happy to report that Porcupine Head Start is the first to start this. Immersion school means only Lakota will be spoken by all teachers. Leonard Little Fingers in Oglala is starting an immersion summer school for the students there. Some people have expressed their concern that Lakota speaking students would have a harder time in testing, etc. for colleges. On the Navajo Reservation, they have shown that the immersion schools (the schools taught in the Dine language; the students are bi-lingual) have higher testing scores than the English speaking schools on the reservation.

The Elders have expressed concern about the lack of knowledge on the part of the children concerning the Lakota culture and history. This is paramount to their health and success in life. The Lakota language is a highly sophisticated language that expresses deep spiritual concepts for every day healthy living. When you lose a language, in essence you lose a culture because language is what formulates how one sees their world.

Right now most schools are teaching Lakota as you would teach English, one word at a time. By examining the statistics, it is obvious this isn't working. We should consider learning conversational sentences. If all our schools would focus on two sentences a week (a question and the answer), at the end of the school year all students and teachers would know 80 sentences. There could be some kind of a reward program at the end of the school year for the students most fluent in Lakota. This could be in addition to the Lakota language classes.

Young parents have stated they would like to be able to learn Lakota along with their children. It would be wonderful to have computer programs and books/CDs that the parents and children could share at home and learn together.

Community members felt the situation regarding the Lakota language should be declared a "state of emergency". They expressed their hope that the teachers would recognize the current method of teaching Lakota is not working and consider a different approach.

The major focus needs to be on the youngest of our children, the ones at home and in our Head Start Programs while they are naturally developing their language skills.

Many expressed that if our language is lost, our spirituality will be lost. This is a commitment that would enrich the spiritual and cultural growth of the student. Let us work in unity toward reviving the language given to the Lakota by the Creator for people now and for generations to come.

All this was made possible by an ANA (Administration for Native Americans) grant. Our sincere gratitude goes to ANA for making all this possble. If you have any questions you can contact Oceti Wakan at Oceti@gwtc.net or 605-867-6056.

Hard work makes hand crafted drums valuable

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - In the back corner of the Dakota Drum Company, a yellow "wet paint" tape cordons off Sonja Holy Eagle's painting station. An assortment of brushes, each dipped in its own pigment, stand upright in a handmade rack, and jars of earth paints made of crushed rock and water are lined up in a box.

The shop at 603 Main Street is where Holy Eagle does some of her painting, covering drumheads and buffalo robes with figures and patterns of her own design. She does more painting at home, spreading larger pieces out on a table.

She paints the animal figures freehand, but she uses a ruler to measure out her more detailed, exact geometric designs before painting them.

"That's what I do all day long," Holy Eagle said. "I paint."

First glance shows perfect figures and designs, but Holy Eagle points out some tiny errors, some splotched paint where a dog bumped her arm or where she stumbled over one of the family pets while she was painting.

Some of her pigments can be washed off, making mistakes easy to correct, but other pigments stain, and errors are permanent. Holy Eagle is philosophical; acknowledging human error is rooted in tradition. Lakota doing beadwork intentionally incorporate one flaw, she said, to embody the message that life isn't perfect.

The process of creating drums and robes is hands-on and locally done for the most part by three people - Holy Eagle, Dave Hansen, and Shaler Lamont- who do everything but kill and skin the buffalo and chop down the cottonwoods whose trunks become drum bodies.

Construction is done at the workshop at Hansen and Holy Eagle's home northeast of Rapid City. Inside a fence at the side of the building are the arm-bumping dogs.

Hansen and Lamont make rawhide the old-fashioned way, Hansen said, with hand tools that don't leave

Please turn to Drum: A2

Sonja Holy Eagle along with Dave Hansen and Shaler Lamont do most of the drum and robe producion. Making drums is back-breaking work, incorporating an element of sacrifice that makes these hand-crafted works of art even more valuable.

Eastman competing for Miss Teen South Dakota

ST. FRANCIS - Jessica Eastman, 15, has been invited to compete for the title of Miss Teen South Dakota during the during the Nov. 10-11 pageant to be held at the Watertown Events Center and Ramkota Inn in Watertown. Her parents are Cleota Randall and Jason Guerue.

The Todd County High School sophomore appears somewhat confident as she is making the necessary preparations for the event. Thus far, she has sent the pageant $195.00 and needs to send an additional $500.00. The packet provides some suggestions as to how one should invite sponsors to assist in raising the funds. She reports that one fundraising dance has been held on her behalf and two more are scheduled.

A request has been made to the Todd County School District to cover the food, lodging and mileage cost for the trip. A raffle is also schedule as a fundraiser.

Drum company expands

the hide brittle like chemical processing does.

They get buffalo hides from meat processors and soak them in soapy water for about 24 hours - "Like presoaking dirty laundry," Hansen said - and then power wash them, a step appreciated by the people who use the hair afterward.

The three local artists use some of the hair to make drum sticks or mallets, Hansen said. The padded head is made of deer hide stuffed with buffalo hair, which is attached to a chokecherry wood handle.

The majority of the hair is sold for other purposes; for instance, one East Coast company spins buffalo hair into yarn and makes hats, scarves and rugs, Hansen said.

In the shop are a dozen black lawn-and-leaf bags full of buffalo hair waiting to be put to use.

Some of the best hides are taken to a commercial tannery to be prepared for robes, but the rawhide is processed in the workshop. After a hide has been washed, it is stretched wet on a frame, the flesh is scraped off, and it is left to dry for four or five days before the hair is removed, Hansen said.

Lamont uses an electric clipper to remove the longest hair and then a scraper to take off the short fuzz. He starts by scoring a line lengthwise and then scrapes up and down, using a metal scraper like others Hansen has, with elk horn or birch handles. The scrapers have to be sharp, Hansen said. He's had these tools a long time, one for 25 years, and buffalo grease has darkened the handles.

Shaler Lamont scrapes the hair from a buffalo hide, the buffalo hair is saved and sold for other uses.

In the workshop's loft is a stack of finished hides, stiff like jerky, ready to be cut into drumheads with half-moon edges that will be tied onto drum bodies with rawhide lacings, Hansen said.

Also in the loft are cylinders of cottonwood in various shades, from white to light brown, curing until they're ready to be used as drum bodies. On each one is a hand-written date.

To make the bodies, Hansen and Lamont first cut logs into sections and take off the bark. Because there is moisture under bark, the sections have to dry for a while before the men carve out the inside.

Using a chainsaw to make a starting hole, the men then use power or hand chisels of various sizes to carve the middle out of the section of log, leaving a wall about an inch thick, or a little thicker for the larger drums, Hansen said.

After a section is chiseled out, it has to season for six weeks or so to dry the moisture in the wood before it can be smoothed off. After smoothing, it has to sit for another month or two, Hansen said.

Cottonwood has "kind of a twisted grain" that works well for drum bodies. Straight-grained lumber, once it starts to crack, will crack all the way, Hansen said.

Making drums is back-breaking work, incorporating an element of sacrifice that makes these hand-crafted works of art even more valuable. Power chisels have to be lifted and dropped over and over, and a couple of them are quite heavy. Scraping hides also requires repetitive motion, as does decorating the hides and drums.

"Painting is tiring, hard on your legs and back," Holy Eagle said.

Dakota Drum Company offers more than just drums and buffalo robes; the shop also consigns arts and crafts, beadwork and quillwork, all made by Plains Indians such as Montana Blackfeet, Pine Ridge Oglala Lakota, and Rosebud Sicangu Lakota.

In a display case are pottery by Richard Underbaggage from Pine Ridge, arrows with flint tips by Tony Richards of Pine Ridge, and arrows with buffalo bone tips by Galen Vance of Cheyenne River.

Drums are less than half the business, Hansen said; however, "It's the one thing we're known for."

They do a pretty good mail order business, and a friend in Germany markets their art in Europe. They sometimes hire extra help, even though "Shaler's equal to about two guys," Hansen said.

For about nine years, Hansen and Holy Eagle traveled around several states, traveling with a trailer full of goods and selling their art at shows and powwows. At the first show she entered, Holy Eagle won a second-place ribbon, and for the first time thought, "Gee, I'm an artist."

And indeed she is. For photos of drums and hides, as well as more information on the work that goes into their creation, go online at www.dakotadrum.com.

Several hundred members gather for Golden West's Annual meeting

WALL - More than 500 Cooperative members from around the area turned out in Wall to attend Golden West's 55th Annual Meeting on Sept. 22.

The return of over $2 million in patronage capital credit checks, a free lunch, election of directors, changes to the Cooperative's Bylaws, cowboy entertainment, and a grand prize drawing of $500 highlighted this year's event.

Golden West Board President Rod Renner began the business meeting with the Pledge of Allegiance and by recognizing the veterans in the audience. He then dedicated the 2007 meeting to the memory of Wayne Merrill. Merrill was a Golden West Board member from Hot Springs who died in May. Renner next reported to the membership that Golden West not only continues its commitment to serving the people of rural South Dakota with the latest technology, but it was also looking at the possibility of expanding the Cooperative in the future to include subsidiary companies.

Golden West General Manager/CEO George Strandell reported that 2006 was a year of significant accomplishment for the Cooperative.

A larger than usual profit margin along with advancements in technology served as talking points for Strandell's address about Golden West's desire to be the full-service provider to its customers. He stated that the recent purchase of several cable systems within the Golden West service area has moved the Cooperative closer to the full-service goal.

This year's meeting also saw the reelection of Duane Wood of Faith, Robert Hansen of Howes, and Richard Baye of Philip to the Board of Directors.

All three ran unopposed. The election to fill the vacancy in District V, previously held by Wayne Merrill, had Kenneth Tonsager, Jr of Hot Springs winning. The membership also voted to approve eight changes to the Bylaws and one change to the Articles of Incorporation.

Several lucky Cooperative members also went home with door prizes, including Dorothy Petrik of Martin, who won the $500 grand-prize drawing.

Nike unveils shoe just for American Indians

BEAVERTON, ORE. (AP) - Nike, last Tuesday, unveiled what it said is the first shoe designed specifically for American Indians, an effort aiming at promoting physical fitness in a population with high obesity rates.

The Beaverton-based company says the Air Native N7 is designed with a larger fit for the distinct foot shape of American Indians, and has a culturally specific look. It will be distributed solely to American Indians; tribal wellness programs and tribal schools nationwide will be able to purchase the shoe at wholesale price and then pass it along to individuals, often at no cost.

"Nike is aware of the growing health issues facing Native Americans," said Sam McCracken, manager of Nike's Native American Business program. "We are stepping up our commitment ... to elevate the issue of Native American health and wellness."

Nike said it is the first time it has designed a shoe for a specific race or ethnicity. It said all profits from the sale of the shoe will be reinvested in health programs for tribal lands, where problems with obesity, diabetes and related conditions are near epidemic levels in some tribes.

Nike designers and researchers looked at the feet of more than 200 people from more than 70 tribes nationwide and found that in general, American Indians have a much wider and taller foot than the average shoe accommodates. The average shoe width of men and women measured was three width sizes larger than the standard Nike shoe.

As a result, the Air Native is wider with a larger toe box. The shoe has fewer seams for irritation and a thicker sock liner for comfort.

Jerry Bread, outreach coordinator for the Native American Studies program at University of Oklahoma, said the idea was "fantastic" and addressed a core issue for tribes, though he was skeptical that the feet of people from so many tribes could be so similar.

"It's an excellent gesture and I know it will get a lot of support from tribal people," Bread said. "We stand to profit from it in our physical health and well being."

Dr. Kelly Acton, director of the national diabetes program for Indian Health Services, said she was dubious of working with a corporation at first but said she was delighted with the result, saying Nike "bent over backwards" to design a shoe and respect public health needs.

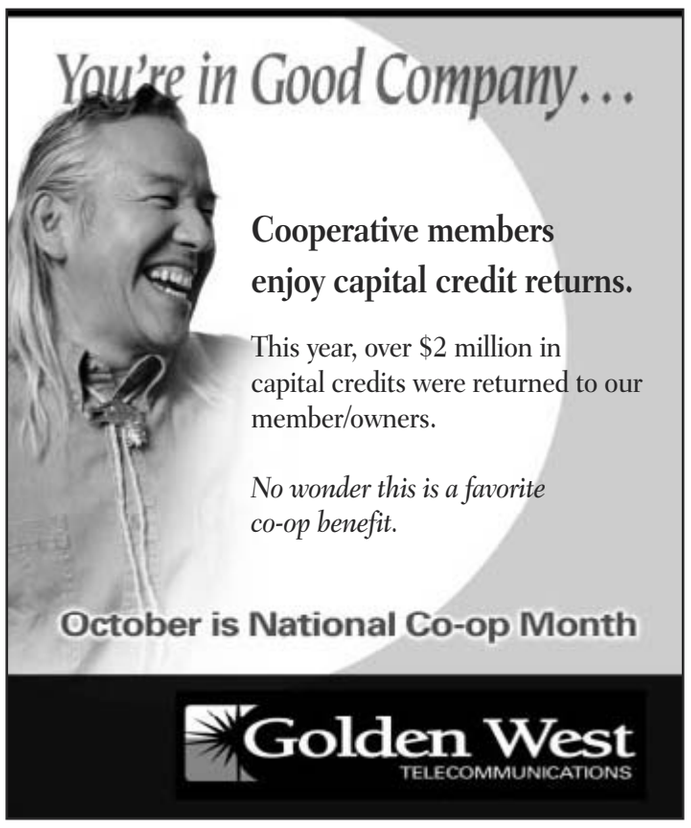
The N7 name is a reference to the seventh generation theory, used by some tribes to look to the three generations preceding them for wisdom and the three generations ahead for their legacy.

The design features several "heritage callouts" as one product manager described it, including sunrise to sunset to sunrise patterns on the tongue and heel of the shoe. Feather designs adorn the inside and stars are on the sole to represent the night sky.

The company anticipates selling at least 10,000 pairs and raising $200,000 for tribal programs. At $42.80 wholesale, it represents less of a financial opportunity than a goodwill and branding effort.

"The reason I like it is that, even if there's not a big Native American market, it gives people the impression there is a constituency that deserves attention," said John Dickson, a member of the executive council of the Native American Leadership Alliance in Washington, D.C.

Paul Swangard, managing director of the Warsaw Sports Marketing Center at the University of Oregon, said the product reflects how Nike does business.



The company prides itself on designing specifically for certain athletes and having close ties to its customers. Nike has been involved with the tribal community for years, supporting tribal athletic teams, events and other social initiatives.

"It reinforces the core of the Nike brand, which is: If you have a body you are an athlete," Swangard said.

A Family Literacy Survey was also completed by the parents to provide important information on literacy habits in the home. Students were entered into prize drawings for a literacy-based toys or products. Two prizes were also given for Grandparent's Day Read with Your Grandchild; those went to Mary Iron Cloud (Borders Book Store) and Rose Never Misses A Shot ($20 in groceries donated by Porcupine Trading Post).

"I would just like to thank all of those parents, family members, and staff that were a part of literacy night. It shows their commitment in supporting literacy at our school," said Misty Clifford, the school's literacy teacher.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I find myself writing with questions again to try to get through my haze of confusion. Recently in my personal life a lot has been going wrong and I know what is causing it but I've done something today that is either going to help me or make things worse.

I am hoping for the best, will he forgive for this commitment or will it end things for good?

I want him to be able to live a happy life, I would like it to be me but if not I still wish the best no matter how much it hurts. Will he see the error of his ways and come back?

Am I doing the right thing because I believe in my heart if I did not take this step that something terrible is going to happen to him and I don't want that.

Do you see him getting this help he needs? In the last letter I asked if you saw me moving you said yes, will he be coming with me? Blessings and best wishes.

Lost

Dear Lost:

The good thing about time is that it continues on, no matter if we feel like it should stop for us or not. It is good that you are taking care of your life and inviting your ex to leave. He is disruptive and unhappy and addicted.

It is too hard to live in that environment without unhappiness. Life is not supposed to be constantly in turmoil.

Life is a celebration of Spirit in human clothes. To best honor the Creator it is best to live as though you honor your life. I say this in this manner so that you might consider if living in chaos and turmoil is truly honoring your Spirit and appreciating the life you have been blessed with.

Now, without hurting your feelings I want you to find some help in co-dependency. Everything about your lamenting heart indicates that you carry so many attachments within your understanding of self (limitations) and a belief or dependency on others for self completion.

By the time you move you will not want him to go with you.

He will accommodate your desire and come back if you let him, but he will not have been faithful and will continue with his addicted behavior.

If that is what you think a good mate is for you is - then go for it; but personally, I prefer a mate that is healthy and balanced.

You are so loving and kind that the man that you choose as your mate should reflect those qualities. In the long run (maybe several years), your ex will work on his behavior and on his understanding of living up to a standard of being a good reflection of the life that the Creator gave him.

He will go through treatment. He will quit blaming everybody for his troubles.

In the meantime, I see you getting on in your life, making new friends, finding new love and creating a better life of balance. Many years from now when this man heals he will make a good mate. If he doesn't make that choice then his future is dismal.

Quit worrying about him. He is a powerful man and like the rest of us, he can take care of himself if he so chooses.

Dear Anna,

I have been reading all the letters written to you and all the help you give to all and that has given me hope. Bless you Annie.

For the first time in a very long time I feel like I am getting over a very sad break up and I feel like I want to move on with my life. I am finally starting to take care of myself and starting to feel the need for a companion. I have met this man that I was told a lot of things about and that I am now looking for in a new start and relationship.

I don't see him very often and hardly know him but recently I had this very strong urge to add him to my prayers.

Later a friend was telling me that this man must have had someone praying for him as he was caught in a bad situation.

A grandma told me that his spirit and my spirit connects and it happens more and more - I feel so close to him and please tell me if there is any future somewhere on the horizon with this man?

Hoping and praying

Dear Hoping and Praying:

This is a very special time on the earth. A time when people are coming together from far distances and against all odds.

It is the sound of the soul calling to the Universe asking for completion through the true experience of personal love.

This man has a very strong soul connection to you. In my terms of understanding you have lived many lives together. You and he are meant to experience time together. There is no written guarantee that everything will be easy, for many people that are drawn together through the soul, the experience can be challenging.

He has come through the years, since the beginning of time, to be by your side, for at least a while.

You have traveled just as far and now the two of you have reached a point where the possibilities are open. This does not guarantee that anything of importance will happen right away - but don't be discouraged. He still has reluctance in becoming committed within a relationship and so he moves in that direction s-l-o-w-l-y.

Your prayers did help him. They were heard and acknowledged because you came from your heart and were humble and sincere within the prayer.

Keep your patience and your heart open. Good things will happen.

Dear Anna,

Recently I have come to the decision that I need to let go of someone in my life that I have become emotionally attached to. I have to let go because he has some issues I can't deal with and maybe I could if I knew he would commit to a future.

He told me he can't. I know in my heart that he is not good for my future because of that.

The problem is when it comes to that time, I fear the emotional pain and hard time I will have in getting over that loss. I don't want to hurt him and I don't want to hurt myself but it has to be done for the good of both of us. How can we do this without causing hurt to all those involved?

Question

Dear Question:

Perspective. It just takes perspective. Start looking at releasing him to his own life without you in it as a blessing and not a sadness. The truth is he told you the truth.

He cannot commit to you. There is no sadness in leaving a man behind that doesn't want to be with you.

There are hurt feelings and pride - but a very miserable life would be the actuality if you try to hold on to him. Now, that would be sad. See the truth and the truth shall set you free - and him too.

Dear Anna:

It is time for the He Sapa Wacipi. My family will all be there. My children will dance and so will I. My ex husband will be there with his new love and he dances too. That is my problem.

My children will want to see their dad and hang out with him and his new girl friend is so mean spirited to them and to me that I can barely stand it. I know that I will want to hit her right in the mouth.

I am concerned if she says one rude thing to my son or daughter that I will jump her.

What can I do to avoid a fight? I just want to plow her and let the pieces of her fall where they may. She always makes comments about my kids dance costumes. I have worked very hard to make sure that their outfits are beautiful and well done.

My ex used to help to make sure that the kids had the best - but now he complains about everything if I ask him for any help with the expenses involved in the Pow Wow he tells me that I can figure it out because he has his own problems.

His girl friend always criticizes the kids and I think it is because her own kids compete with mine. What do you see happening - will I hit her?

Dancing in Rapid City.

Dear Dancing:

Pow! Wow! It looks like you could give a whole new meaning to those words. Remember when you were a little girl and your mother told you to ignore the girls who were stupid and mean? Well I am about to give you the same advice. Ignore her. Don't stand nearby when she is talking to your ex or your children.

Be aloof.

It is so admirable to walk with grace and not be bothered. If you have to say something to her just to vent and to release the desire to jump her in the parking lot please just say something short and sweet with sarcasm.

She won't know if she has been kissed or slapped.

Use your mind and your heart. When she says to your daughter, "you have grown a lot since last year and your outfit is a little tight, but it still looks good" you can respond with, "Well, she admires you and is imitating how you look." You get the drift?

Don't you dare puncture her tires in the parking lot. Do not spill ketchup on her white leather dress. Avoid being arrested; it's a much better plan that spending the money for an attorney and the embarrassment that your children will feel and the gossip.

You and I and almost everyone else know that she is jealous that your kids are yours and not hers, and that you had her man before she did. Remember that.

She really believes that your ex still loves you so she constantly tries to undermine you in every way that she can. Your ex won't stand up for you so don't force it.

Dance, have fun, and enjoy taking home a purse full of cash from the performances of your children. Now that, my dear, is true victory. Living well is the best revenge.

Red Cloud, Pine Ridge earn top seeds for 2007 LNI

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - We still have two regular season football games remaining and the playoffs, the cross country regionals are set for Thursday and Friday with the State cross country meet set for Oct. 20 in Huron and volleyball is on the backstretch with districts set for the end of October.

This is followed by regionals and State in November but during the last weekend of September in Rapid City the subject was Lakota Nation Invitational basketball and determining who the top seeds were for the 2007 tourney.

The Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes, the defending LNI champs earned the number one seed for the girls and Red Cloud boys who went 19-4 last year, losing only to state championship game teams and who return their top eight players from last year snared the boy's number one seed.

Coaches, athletic directors and some school administrators met in Rapid City at the Civic Center on Saturday, Sept. 29, to listen to presentations and vote on which teams they felt were deserving of top seeds for this year's tournament scheduled for Rapid City Dec. 19-22. Before listening to coaches from each school, participants heard from Rapid City Convention and Visitor's Center on how to get the best deals for your school when it comes time to reserve hotel rooms for the many teams planning to attend the tourney. Jess Mendoza, an administrator and head boys coach from Cheyenne Eagle Butte presented a draft of a proposed dress code for all of the student athletes that participate in the LNI.

Red Cloud turned out to be a consensus number one seed for the boys; their only losses last year came to St. Thomas More and Little Wound, teams who played for the State A championship in March and Chadron, a team who played for the State B champi-

LWS to kick off vocabulary building pilot project, promotes community economy

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett
Times Editor

KYLE - On Monday, Oct. 15, Little Wound School will kick off a nine week pilot project for students in 6th ,7th and 8th grade designed to improve their vocabulary and spelling skills. They will also be able to "Earn While You Learn".

The students will learn five words a day, totaling up to 25 words a week. By the end of the nine weeks, students could improve their vocabulary by more than 200 words.

Not only will their vocabulary improve but the students can also earn money. For every word they learn and spell correctly, they can earn $1 for that word.

If they learn all five of their words for the school day, they could earn $5 for the five words. If the students have good attendance and learn their vocabulary words for the week, they could earn up to $25 for the week.

A training session was held for staff, parents, and students on how the pilot project will work. Terry Albers, School Improvement Coordinator, said if the project is successful, it may be implemented in the high school academic program next year or next semester.

The project is part of program entitled Smart Words, which helps to build student's vocabulary, their self-confidence, and improve their motivation to learn. In this program, students are not paid to attend school.

Instead, they intensively study to master very challenging vocabulary and must correctly test to receive their achievement cash award.

Albers stresses that in order for students to test for their achievement award, they must be in attendance for that day, which should improve overall attendance.

Some research indicates that the average literacy rate for Indian youth is one third that of the rest of the national norm.

When a student lacks basic vocabularies, they struggle with reading.

When a student is not a good reader because of the lack of vocabulary, they are fearful of mispronouncing words and are shy to read aloud in front of their peers. By improving their vocabulary, they improve their readings levels and in turn it will improve their self image and not be afraid of words or reading.

Sometimes in poverty or low-income areas students start kindergarten 3,000 to 7,000 words behind other children.

We need to address this gap in a way that is creative and focused on children's strengths, said Albers.

onship in Nebraska. The Crusaders entire starting lineup of Christian McGhee, Billy Scott, Lester Gotheridge, Dave Giago and Art Vitalis are returning as well as Mike Twiss, a 6'3" junior and two talented sophomores, Bryer Iron Cloud and Carl Swallow.

White River, participating in their first ever LNI and featuring Louie Krogman who will probably break the all time individual scoring record during the championship semi-finals on Friday night of this year's tournament, was selected as the number two seed.

Todd County who lost to Little Wound last year in the Region 7A championship game, was selected number three, Heart of the Earth (Oh Day Aki) was fourth with Standing Rock number five.

The bracket for the boys includes: game one-Red Cloud (1) vs. Crazy Horse (16) at 10 a.m., game two-White River (2) vs. Lower Brule (15) at 11:30 a.m., game three-Todd County (3) vs. Flandreau Indian (14), game four-Hill City (8) vs. Custer (9) at 2:30 p.m., game five-Heart of the Earth (Oh Day Aki) (4) vs. Takini (13) 4 p.m., game six-standing Rock (5) vs. Crow Creek (12) 5:30 p.m., game seven-Little Wound (6) vs. St. Francis (11) 7 p.m., game eight-Cheyenne Eagle Butte (7) vs. Pine Ridge (10) 8:30.p.m.

Last year Pine Ridge won each of their LNI games by 30 points or more, they went through the season undefeated, ranked number one in the state until losing to Bennett County in the District 14A finals, they have most of their team back and earned the number one seed. Lacey Weston, Keisha Brewer, Christian and Sophia Janis and Saudia Tasso lead the way. Dusty LeBeau is returning to the coaching ranks and will take over the reins of the Lady Thorpes.

He last coached Pine Ridge in 2004 when the Laura Big Crow led Lady Thorpes lost to Sisseton in the State A championship game.

Two teams that qualified for the State A tourney came next with Cheyenne Eagle Butte seeded number two; Alyssa Kingfisher has taken over the coaching duties from Arlyn Wohlleber and has Jessica Keckler, Lacy Leaf, Scottie and Marissa Landreaux, Kayla Turning Heart and Leona Benoist returning. Red Cloud is seeded three after they went to State last year with no seniors and two juniors, they have Ida Clarke and Lisa Bear Robe back along with Marque Lunderman, an outstanding sophomore last year and a new coach, Jerome LeBeau. St. Francis is number four with Standing Rock at number five.

The bracket for the girls includes: game one-Pine Ridge (1) vs. Crazy (16) 10 a.m. game two-Cheyenne Eagle Butte (2) vs. Heart of the Earth/Oh Day Aki (15) 11:30 a.m. game three-Red Cloud (3) vs. Lower Brule (14) 1 p.m., game four-St. Francis (4) vs. Flandreau Indian (13) 2:30 p.m., game five-Standing Rock (5) vs. Takini (12) 4 p.m., game six-Todd County (6) vs. Crow Creek (11) 5:30 p.m., game seven- Little Wound.(7) vs. Hill City (10) 7 p.m. and game eight-Custer (8) vs. White River (9) 8:30 p.m.

St. Thomas More has been in the last three boy's LNI championship games losing to Lower Brule in 2004, beating Little Wound in 2005 and losing to Little Wound in 2006.

The Cavaliers have dropped out of the LNI. Last year the board voted to return to an all Indian format, then changed their mind so St. Thomas More decided rather than wait to be asked to leave the tourney, they would voluntarily leave. Opening up their schedule for four games provided them an opportunity to add new teams to their schedule, some from East River.

The LNI committee had been hoping to have the new addition to the Civic Center completed by December of 2007 so all of the LNI games could be played under the Civic Center roof; it will now be completed for the 2008 LNI.

This Year's tournament will use multiple gyms to meet the needs of two 16 team tournaments including St. Thomas More, Douglas, Rapid City Central and National American University.

Last year the two teams, Little Wound and St. Thomas More played for the LNI championship in December and in March played on the same floor for the State A championship.

Who knows what will happen this year but there is a good chance that the state individual career scoring record will be broken on the Civic Center floor during the tournament.

Ojibewe woman ordered to pay $222,000 for illegal downloading

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - Jammie Thomas, Mille Lacs Band of Ojibwe, of Brainerd, Minn., makes $36,000 a year but says she's not looking for a handout to pay a $222,000 judgment after a jury decided she illegally shared music online.

"I'm not going to ask for financial help," she told The Associated Press last Friday. But she added, "If it comes, I'm not going to turn it down, either."

Record labels have sued more than 26,000 people they accuse of downloading and offering music for sharing online in violation of copyright laws. Many of those people have settled by paying the companies a few thousand dollars.

Thomas was the first person to fight back all the way to a trial. Six major record companies accused Thomas of offering 1,702 songs on the Kazaa file-sharing network. At trial, they focused on 24 songs and jurors decided Thursday that Thomas willfully violated the copyright on all 24. Their verdict was for damages of $9,250 per song, or $222,000.

The recording industry won two victories with that verdict.

Beyond the money, the industry added to a growing body of legal precedents holding that making copyright-protected songs available online, even without proof the songs went anywhere, infringes on the copyrights for the songs.

Ray Beckerman, an attorney who has represented people sued by the record companies, said the companies used one case where there was a $22,500 default judgment to scare people into settling.

"Now, look at this. This is 10 times better. They can talk about this case, they can use it for frightening people," he said.

"I guess it's my Native pride," said Thomas, who is a member of the Mille Lacs Band of Ojibwe. "Up until this point I have not held my hand out and asked for financial assistance from anyone."

Thomas, 30, works for the Mille Lacs band coordinating a federal grant for cleaning up contaminated land. She said she doesn't have the means to pay.

"I am a single mother of two boys. I make $36,000 a year at my job," she said. "At best they could try and get a court order garnishing my wages."

Her attorney, Brian Toder, said that copyright law automatically awards court costs and attorney fees to the winning party.

Paying those too could push the total judgment against Thomas as high as a half-million dollars.

Thomas questioned whether the record companies will be able to enforce the verdict because she is an enrolled member of the Mille Lacs band, lives on its land and works for the band.

But Kevin Washburn, who teaches American Indian Law as a visiting associate professor at Harvard Law School, said tribal courts generally enforce judgments from other courts. And since this is a federal verdict, the tribal courts might not even have a say in enforcing the verdict.

"One way or another she's got to pay," he said.

LWS vocabulary project

The reading project will introduce vocabulary building techniques that capitalize on the student's learning strengths of visualization and linking it to pronunciation.

Research shows that most Native people learn best visually, followed by verbal stories. Lakota are verbal people.

By having words pronounced, while visually imprinting them, brings together two of our most powerful learning strengths, Albers said of the vocabulary program.

Albers emphasized that parents are the other teaching partner in the vocabulary project and encourages the parents to be aware of the project and help their students at home.

With parents helping and learning the words also, the entire family can become vocabulary enriched.

Little Wound School teacher to be honored guest of the Japanese

KYLE - This October, Didier DuPont will depart for Tokyo as a participant in the Japan Fulbright Memorial Fund Teacher Program. Dupont, from Little Wound High School was selected from a national pool of more than 1,700 applicants by a panel of educators to earn this honor. This program allows distinguished primary and secondary school educators in the U.S. to travel to Japan for three weeks in an effort to promote greater intercultural understanding between the two nations.

Didier Dupont has a masters degree in philosophy from the University of Lille, France, and has been a teacher at the Little Wound High School since August 1995. He teaches French, World History, Lakota philosophy and is currently teaching Lakota Studies and US History. He is also a part time faculty at Oglala Lakota College since fall semester of 1996 and has taught various classes.

They will begin their visit in Tokyo with a practical orientation on Japanese life and culture and meetings with Japanese government officials and educators. They then will travel in groups of 20 to selected host cities where they will have direct contact with Japanese teachers and students during visits to primary and secondary schools as well as a teachers college. They also will visit cultural sites and local industries in addition to a brief homestay with a Japanese family.

The Japan Fulbright Memorial Fund, based in Tokyo, oversees all aspects of the Teacher program.

The program is sponsored by the Government of Japan and was launched in 1997 to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the U.S. government Fulbright Program, which has enabled more than 6,000 Japanese citizens to study in the U.S. on Fulbright fellowships for graduate education and research. The Institute of International Education acts as the agency for the Japan Fulbright Memorial Fund to coordinate the recruitment and pre-departure activities of the Teacher program in the United States.

EAGLE BUTTE - Michael Potter, Cheyenne Eagle Butte's 185 pound senior halfback, put the Braves in the lead in the first quarter on a six yard run; it was to be their only score as Todd County prevailed 28-8 for their fifth win of the season against just one loss.

"We lost Gunner Krogman during the St. Francis game to a high ankle sprain, then we lost our back up tailback and back up quarterback and Lawyer Claymore got injured so between injuries, illness and eligibility problems we were juggling players, patching holes, moving a player here and there, it was hard to get any rhythm then Eagle Butte opens the game by ramming the ball on the ground right down our throat all the way to the end zone for a score and we had to regroup," said Bob Kornely, Todd County head coach, "but regroup we did and we got through it."

Down 6-0 to start the second quarter, CJ Spotted Tail hit Jaden Allen on a five yard TD pass then hit Aaron Stoddard on a pass for the two point conversion and the Falcons were up 8-6. Before the half, Spotted Tail scored on a three yard run, the point after attempt failed and Todd County had a 14-0 lead at the half. The Braves forced a safety in the third to cut the lead to 14-8 but Todd County scored in the fourth on a Jaden Allen interception runback for 68 yards and a TD, Mike Neiss ran it over for two and Noah Kilonzo scored on a seven yard run to close out the Falcons fifth win of the season.

Spotted Tail finished 10 of 19 for 131 yards and a touchdown, Stoddard had 15 carries for 51 yards, Neiss carried five times for 30 yards, and Kilonzo six carries for 35 yards. Allen had four catches for 56 yards, Neiss three for 42 and Stoddard two for 28. CEB's Cody Neigel five of 14 for 84 yards and an interception, Stottin Newbrough had two catches for 46 yards, John Mader one for 10 yards, Potter carried the ball 17 times for 92 yards, Spenser Peterson had six for 24 and Kyle Walters had three for 18. Stoddard led the way on defense with 12 tackles, Ocean LeHauli 10, Allen eight and Seth Larvie six.

Todd County is now 5-1 and travels to Bennett County on Friday while Cheyenne Eagle Butte is 2-4 and travels to St. Francis on Friday night.

"On top of all of these injuries, Spotted Tail sprained his ankle in the second quarter but played through it," said Kornely, "but on Saturday, there was Spotted Tail in a cast and crutches, he said don't worry, I'll have it off for practice on Thursday and I'll be ready for Friday's game - obviously if we were 100 per cent we should be the favorite for our last two games going into the playoffs but now we'll be the underdogs."

He was also scheduled to attend a meeting with tribal leaders in Eagle Butte and talk with the Indian Health Service hospital personnel about construction.

Shakopee Mdewakanton becoming a player in charitable world

Among the biggest benefactors has been the Oglala Lakota

PRIOR LAKE, Minn. (AP) - The Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community, the owner of Mystic Lake Casino, plans to hand out $21 million this year, making the tribe a major philanthropic player in Minnesota and possibly the most generous tribe in the country.

Since 2003, the tribe has tripled its giving from $7 million to more than $21 million this year. As a result, the Minnesota Council on Foundations has started listing the Shakopee tribe among the top 25 grantmakers in the state.

King said the sovereign status of the Shakopee makes it difficult to classify the tribe's charitable giving. But - depending on the classification used - the tribe can be seen as either one of the top five foundations or one of the top 10 corporate givers in Minnesota.

Next month, the tribe's giving will surpasses $100 million.

``We're just happy to be able to help when we can,'' tribal vice chairman Glynn A. Crooks said. ``We can't do everything, but we do help.''

John McCarthy, executive director of the Minnesota Indian Gaming Association, said the tribe is probably the top philanthropic American Indian group in the country. He estimates that the three wealthiest tribes in Minnesota - Shakopee, the Prairie Island Mdewakanton Dakota Tribe and the Mille Lacs Band of Ojibwe - together donate $35 million to $40 million a year.

In the past 25 years, Indian gambling has grown to a $1.2 billion industry with 18 casinos operated by Minnesota's 11 tribes. The most successful casino operation has been Shakopee's, which McCarthy estimates generates $600 million a year or more. Others estimate the tribe's revenue is closer to $1 billion.

The tribe routinely declines to comment on revenue figures or what percentage of revenues the charitable giving represents.

The tribe has dramatically increased its giving in the wake of increasing pressure from politicians to give even more.

The biggest benefactors of the tribe's generosity has been the Oglala Sioux on impoverished Pine Ridge.

Apart from the shelter for battered women, the Oglala will use the Shakopee money to construct a station this fall to keep its ambulances warm. In the past, ambulances on Pine Ridge were kept running all night in winter so they were instantly available.

Cecilia Fire Thunder, the former president of the Oglala tribe, said the Shakopee money literally saved the Oglala, who were in so much debt in 2004 that the tribe was ready to, in effect, declare bankruptcy and turn its finances over to the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs. The Minnesota tribe provided the Oglala with a $38 million loan, which helped the tribe pay off its $17 million debt and expand its casino, Fire Thunder said.

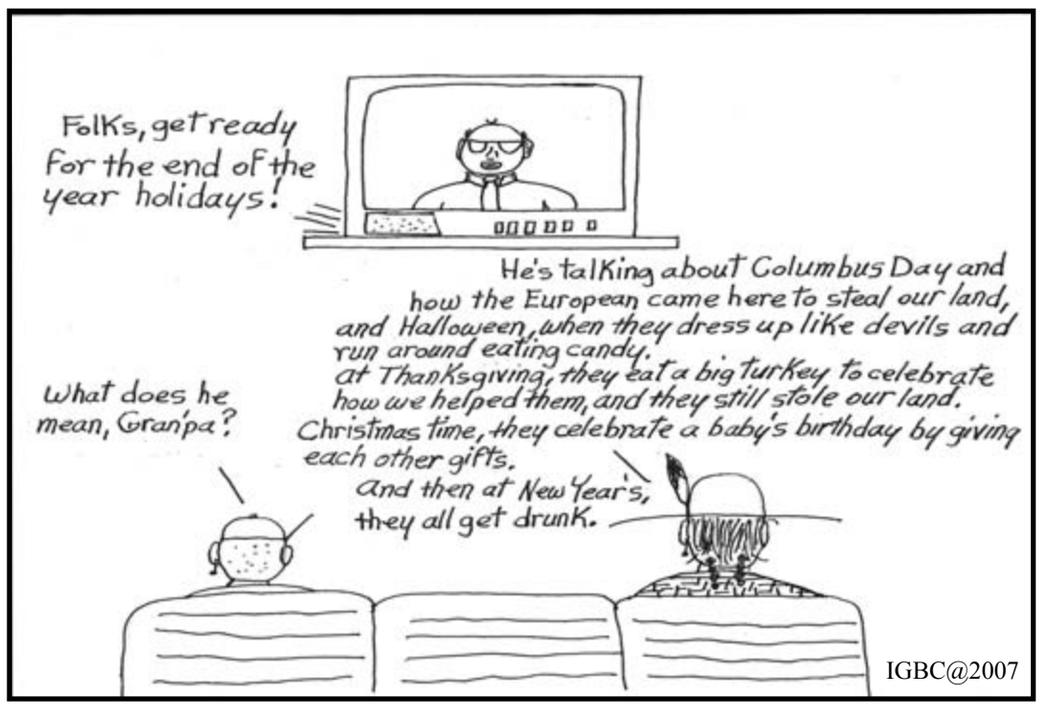
Many disappointed that the SCHIPS bill was vetoed

Many local people are also disappointed that President Bush chose to veto the State Children's Health Insurance Program or CHIPS. Last week Rep. Stephanie Herseth held her weekly media conference via telephone from Washington, DC and expressed a similar disappointment at the veto.

Herseth noted upwards of 18,000 children could qualify for the low income program in South Dakota if funding levels were increased to $35 billion over the next five years as a majority of Republicans and Democrats had voted for.

At present, some 11,000 South Dakota children participate in the program which has been cited as a very successful government funded program over the last ten years. It will be interesting to listen to those congressmen who voted against the measure explain to their constituents their reason for going along with the President. At a time when the country is funding the war at billions of dollars without blinking, it is ironic that it is now the children who must also make a sacrifice.

The health insurance program is a federally funded program administered by states which allows parents who do not qualify for Medicaid but cannot afford private health insurance to have their children covered.



The program requires families to meet federal poverty guidelines and some people seem concerned that the current cap might be increased so that higher income children qualify. The reasoning is that higher income families should be able to afford the cost to cover their children without government assistance.

Rep. Herseth also arrived in Rapid City on Saturday for the He Sapa Wacipi and as the time came closer to grand entry, she essentially repeated her concerns about the SCHIPS program to television reporters and journalists.

It was an eye opener to see that the Rapid City Journal editorial board voiced its opinion in favor of the very successful health insurance program. I believed that the paper had a rather conservative slant, but then children's health insurance is something we can get on the band wagon about.

When asked as to what tribal nations could do to assist in advocating for SCHIPS, Herseth said that they could fully document their need for the program and maybe list accurate numbers of children that qualify.

Each of us need to write our congressional delegation and ask them to work on a new bill that will represent a compromise measure for as the editorial board duly noted, the program would save billions in uninsured health care costs that most of us will share in anyway, through paying sales taxes on any number of products.

Letters to the Editor

RST tribal council unfair in hiring practices

Dear Editor:

My name is Missy Bartling (Whipple). I am an enrolled member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. My father was the late Albert "Jack" Whipple and my mother is Octa Small. I grew up in the Antelope Community, spent most of my adult life in He Dog Community and currently reside in Gregory, SD. I am married and have two children. I worked for Indian Health Service for 11 years in various clerical capacities. I began my employment with the Rosebud Sioux Tribe as administrative assistant for health administration from 1990-1995. From 1995 to current I'm administrative assistant at the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Alcohol Drug Treatment Program.

I earned the following degrees from Sinte Gleska University; Associate of Arts-Human Services:1997, Bachelor of Arts-Human Services/Criminal Justice: 1999, Associate of Science-Business Administration: 2000 an Master of Arts-Human Service: 2005.

I applied for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Juvenile Detention Center Administrator position that closed August 25, 2007. I interviewed on Sept. 24 with two other applicants. I was not selected by the tribal council for this position, although I was the only tribal member that met the minimum qualifications. The applicant selected was not a tribal member nor did he meet the minimum qualifications, therefore I contested this selection based on two principles:

1) Resolution RB73-07 was enacted to protect the employment rights of tribal members. Further, "First preference for any and all employment on the Rosebud Reservtion shall be given to the members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe."

1) The Job Description clearly read: Minimum Qualifications: A Master Degree in Criminal Justice or closely related field is required.

I met with the tribal president on Friday, Sept. 27 regarding my challenge and received notice by the personnel director on Monday morning, Oct. 1 that a hearing was scheduled to deal with this issue on Tuesday, Oct. 2.

The outcome of the hearing was ten tribal council representatives violated the oath they swore by as tribal leaders to uphold the very laws set in place to protect our tribal members. The tribal chairman supported these ten representatives decision therefore he also violated his oath of office to uphold Ordinance RB 86-06 Rosebud Sioux Tribal Personnel Policies and Procedures where Resolution RB 73-07 is referenced. There should have been no question on the Tribal Chairman's position.

In this hearing I heard continuous and mere excuses from these ten Tribal Council Representatives whey they failed to support a highly qualified tribal member but he fact still remained they violated my rights, discredited my education and 16 years of administrative work experience and most importantly discounted my membership in my very own tribe.

I am ashamed of these council representatives response to my concerns. I am ashamed to call them my leaders, for they are not. Their message was loud and clear Tuesday, Oct. 2 that they do not support their own tribal members nor do they support education. What happened to "first preference for any and all employment on the Rosebud Reservation shall be given to the members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe," what happened to supporting higher education? We have an unemployment rate of 80 percent yet these ten representatives are allowing and supporting non-members jobs our own members qualify for. What is this message telling our Sinte Gleska University students many who are single parents, raising children on meager incomes, those struggling with work, school and family? I strongly support higher education and always will, I know the dedication, commitment, drive and determination it takes to get a degree.

My overall experience in dealing with these ten representatives was appalling. I stated facts, my issues were clear and concise yet I did not receive any justifiable explanation for why a non-tribal member with a lesser level of education and no administration work experience was selected for the Juvenile Detention Center Administrator.

There were four tribal council representatives, Jo Colombe, Russell Eagle Bear, Marion Young-One Star and Lewis Good Voice Flute

Notes From Indian Country

By Tim Giago

The name "Indian" and political correctness

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Indians, Native Americans, American Indians are all labels foisted upon the indigenous people of America and so what is a newspaper to do when selecting the supposed correct label?

In his book "The Day the World Ended at Little Big Horn," Joseph M. Marshall III reviewed all of these labels and then wrote, "We prefer to be identified by our specific tribes or nations, of which there are nearly five hundred ethnically identifiable in the United States."

He goes on, "However, in the interest of avoiding confusion within the pages of this work, I have chosen to used the word Indian mostly in those instances when there is a necessary reference to more than a specific tribe or native nation."

And so in this era of political correctness even the great Sicangu author, Joe Marshall, has to admit that he is also faced with this recurring dilemma. Any writer covering issues related to events and people associated with Indian country faces this same question and must decide whether to follow political correctness or go along with historic usage.

If one visits an Indian reservation (there's that word Indian again) and speaks to the elders of the tribe, he or she will find that they refer to themselves as "Indian," without reservation (no pun intended).

I am a firm believer that most historians are wrong when they credit Christopher Columbus for coining the word "Indian" because he thought he was landing his ships in India. In 1492 there was no country known as India. Instead that country was called Hindustan. I think that is closer to the truth that the Spanish padre that sailed with Columbus was so impressed with the innocence of the Natives he observed that he called them Los Ninos in Dios. My spelling may be wrong on the Spanish words, but the description by the padre means something like "Children of God."

After many years of usage the word Indios emerged and to this day the indigenous people of South and Central America are called Indios. I am told that as the word wound its way North it evolved into "Indian." Of course some will say that there was a place called the East Indies in 1492 and Columbus may have thought he was headed for that region.

So how and when did the efforts to politicize the name start? I suspect that some of it started when Native Americans enrolled in some of the white colleges. I think they found the word "Indian" offensive and set about to remake it. They found that the word Indian was often used in a derogatory fashion such as "drunken Indian" or "rotten Indian." Perhaps the white people would have found it more difficult to say "drunken Native American?"

And finally, when some Indian journalists made it to the newsrooms of large and prestigious mainstream newspapers, they reacted to the word "Indian" as they did when they were in college. The went to their editors and tried to impress upon them that the paper should no longer use the word "Indian," but should, instead, switch to Native American or Native.

I first ran across this sudden change when I was mailed a copy of my weekly column that had appeared in the Lincoln (Neb.) Star Journal. In every place I had used "Indian" the editorial page editor edited it to read "Native." Of course I was appalled. If I had intended to use "Native" I would have used it and I resented the fact that the EPE had changed the word in order to fit his presumption of political correctness.

I immediately dropped him a note and asked, "When you come across organizational names like National Congress of American Indians or National Indian Education Association are you going to change them to read National Congress of Native Americans or National Native Education Association."

How about newspapers like "Indian Country Today," my former weekly paper? "Native American Country Today" just doesn't have the same ring to it.

The local daily newspaper in Rapid City, SD decided to drop the use of the word "Indian" and replace it with "Native American." I believe they did so when they, with unintended fanfare, used a headline that highlighted the word "Indian" when describing the new education director for the Rapid City Schools. A howl went up in the Indian community, but the howl was less about political correctness than about the bad usage of the name in that particular context. I believe it is a policy that needs to be reconsidered because anyone born in the United States of America is a Native American, but they are not American Indians.

It is confusing enough trying to figure out what to call Blacks, Hispanics or Asians without adding to the confusion by trying to rename American Indians.

Mining company escorted off the Pine Ridge by Tokala

By Natalie Hand
Special to the Times

Today, traditional leaders requested once again that Native American Energy Group leave the reservation. N.A.E.G.'s counsel put forth a motion to dismiss the exclusion order filed against them. The ongoing show cause hearing to exclude N.A.E.G., which began Sept. 24, came to an abrupt stop today when Oglala Sioux Tribal Court Chief Judge Lisa Adams respectfully asked N.A.E.G. representatives to willingly leave the reservation until their Motion to Dismiss can be heard on Oct. 30, 2007. Judge Adams advised all parties that she is required to give at least 10 days notice to schedule such a hearing.

Newly appointed N.A.E.G. attorney, Dana Hanna, argued that the plaintiffs, Oglala Lakota Delegates of the Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council and Debra White Plume of Owe Aku, had not presented any evidence as to why his clients should be excluded from the reservation. Further, he stated that the 1851 and 1868 Ft. Laramie Treaties have no bearing on this case and that only the OST president or vice president could initiate exclusion orders. He entered a motion to dismiss the case.

The plaintiffs, representing themselves, argued that Hanna should excuse himself from this case based on conflict of interest. Hanna informed the court that he formally worked as Rosebud Sioux Tribe's Attorney General and now represents the Oglala Sioux Tribe in Indian Child Welfare Act. cases. White Plume stated, "We feel that the work that Mr. Hanna does to help our Oglala Lakota children is honorable. He is helping to protect our Nation, and to then come here to defend a mining company that is not wanted here by our Nation is a clear conflict. We are here to protect our Nation from this company, and he is here to defend that company's assertion that they have a right to be on our land."

Chief Oliver Red Cloud, Chairman of the Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council, informed the court and the defendants that the treaty was the supreme law of the United States. Further, he indicated that the treaty is in the OST Constitution and has great bearing on court proceedings here. "People like you (Hanna), challenge all Native nations when you dismiss treaty laws. Maybe we will have to use Article I on you as well. I will convene a full Treaty Council meeting with the eight reservations and we will collectively decide your fate in Indian Country," stated Chief Red Cloud.

The Honorable Judge Adams expressed the conflicts that this case is creating. In addressing Hanna and his clients, she stated that she is in a difficult position, as the OST Law and Order Code specifically states that tribal customs and traditions be recognized. On the other hand, Judge Adams noted that she is sworn to uphold the laws set forth in the I.R.A. court system.

Hanna continued to argue his motions for dismissal and it became apparent that he and N.A.E.G. representatives had no immediate plans to leave as requested. At that point, Oglala Tokala, present in the courtroom, approached the defendants and told them to leave. They were escorted from the courthouse. Eileen Janis, N.A.E.G. continues to stand with the mining company and insists that they are only here to conduct a water-study.

In testimony last week, OST President John Steele indicated that he was present with Janis at meetings in New York City with N.A.E.G. while they pitched a uranium mining proposal to potential investors. He further testified that he has always been against mining and that he doesn't understand why N.A.E.G. is fighting to stay on Pine Ridge when they are clearly unwanted by so many entities here.

When presented with a copy of a memo to N.A.E.G. on Steele's presidential letterhead, Steele testified that he had never seen the memo and that his signature had been forged. At that time, Janis yelled from the court gallery that she had discussed the memo with John and he told her that she could sign his name to it. Steele denied this.

Judge Adams ordered the Treaty Council and Owe Aku to submit a written motion concerning the removal of Hanna as attorney for N.A.E.G. within three days to forward to the OST Supreme Court.

Additionally, the plaintiffs have until Oct. 26 to submit their written motion as to why the court should not dismiss this exclusion request. Court is scheduled to resume on Oct. 30 at 9 a.m.

According to Chief Oliver Red Cloud, an emergency session of the Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council will convene on Sunday, Oct. 14 at 10 a.m. in Billy Mills Hall at Pine Ridge.

as well as the vice chairman Wayne Boyd that supported the rights of a tribal member and education.

I have the utmost respect for these individuals fortitude and desire to uphold our tribal laws and regulations. I admire these people for their perseverance in assuring I was heard, treated with respect and dignity. I am very grateful and appreciative of their assistance with this issue. They are true leaders!

Remember on Oct. 25 those tribal leaders that did not support one of their own tribal members. I believe their decision was political, personal and sexually discriminatory.

For the other applicant that received a telephone interview was also a woman (non-Indian) that had two masters degrees in criminal justice.

HOT SPRINGS - Hot Springs dug in on Friday and held Little Wound to a total of minus two yards on offense on their way to a 53-0 win in a game called with nine minutes left in the fourth quarter.

Trin In the Woods hit Spur Pourier on a six yard pass play for his only completion in five attempts, he was intercepted once by Dustin Fischer who ran it back 40 yards for a TD.

"Before the game, I told the boys to go out play hard and have fun, but they started the game scared and even with a good chewing they still struggled," said Darrel Hunter, Mustangs head coach, "even when we did put something together, we would have it called back because of a penalty, these boys are better than how they played there in Hot Springs."

Hot Springs rushed the ball 39 times for 305 yards as the Bison line dominated the line of scrimmage on both sides of the ball with Clint Kindred scoring three touchdowns, Fischer chipping in two and Matt Hazrkless hitting three passes out of four attempts for 71 yards and one TD.

Brice Hornbeck, Little Wound's all state wide receiver did not play after injuring his knee in practice.

"This week we are concentrating on a return to fundamentals," said Hunter, "we are working on blocking and tackling and out of all our games this season, we are looking forward to our upcoming game with Red Cloud after losing a close one to the Crusaders last year."

Little Wound is 4-2 on the year, travels to Red Cloud on Friday before hosting Bennett County on Thursday, Oct. 18 in the last regular season game of the year. Hot Springs is 2-4 and host Douglas on Friday.

Crusaders crush Crow Creek 50-0 for fifth straight win

PINE RIDGE - Billy Scott, Red Cloud's 180 pound senior running back who is among the state leaders in rushing and scoring, opened the Crow Creek game Friday with runs of four, eight, 12 and 12 yards before scoring the first of his three touchdowns with an 11 yard scamper through the middle of the Chieftain's line as Red Cloud knocked off Crow Creek Friday 50-0 for their fifth straight win of the season.

"We worked hard on keeping Crow Creek out of the end zone," said Keith Ferguson, first year head coach at Red Cloud, "our defense has played well all year, we've been stingy with points allowed and we want to keep improving on the defensive side of the ball."

Dominic LeBeaux ran for two on Scott's first TD while Jeremy Blacksmith came back on Red Cloud's next series to hit Mike Cuny for a 13 yard TD pass midway through the first quarter. The run failed on the extra point but the Chieftains struggled to get their offense going on their next offensive series to open the second quarter and had to cover a bad snap on a punt for a safety to make it 16-0.

Art Vitalis intercepted a Vilas Fallis pass and returned it 57 yards for a TD late in the second quarter, Scott ran for two to give Red Cloud a 24-0 lead at the half. Scott picked up where he left off early in the third with an 11 yard run for his second TD and following a Roman White Calf fumble recovery, it took all of 33 seconds to turn in a nifty 33 yard gallop for his third TD. Dave Giago's run for two gave the Crusaders a 38-0 lead.

Kiley Weston, a freshman running back, reeled off a 19 yard off the right tackle and Dominick LeBeaux finished the game off with a 35 yard TD run with 4:51 to go in the fourth.

Scott finished with another dominating performance on the ground carrying the ball 18 times for 176 yards and three touchdowns, LeBeaux had five carries for 51 yards, a touchdown and a two point conversion and Blacksmith was three for 12 for 65 yards and a touchdown. Fallis was 11 of 25 for 148 yards and one interception. Larry Gayton had one catch for 58 yards, Terrance Gonzalez grabbed three for 38 yards.

Andrew Twiss led the Crusaders with 10 tackles while Red Cloud held Crow Creek to a minus 26 yards on the ground on eight carries. Crow Creek is 0-6 on the year and travels to Pine Ridge on Friday while Red cloud is 5-1 and hosts Little Wound on Friday.

Pine Ridge downs St. Francis 16-12 for first win of the season

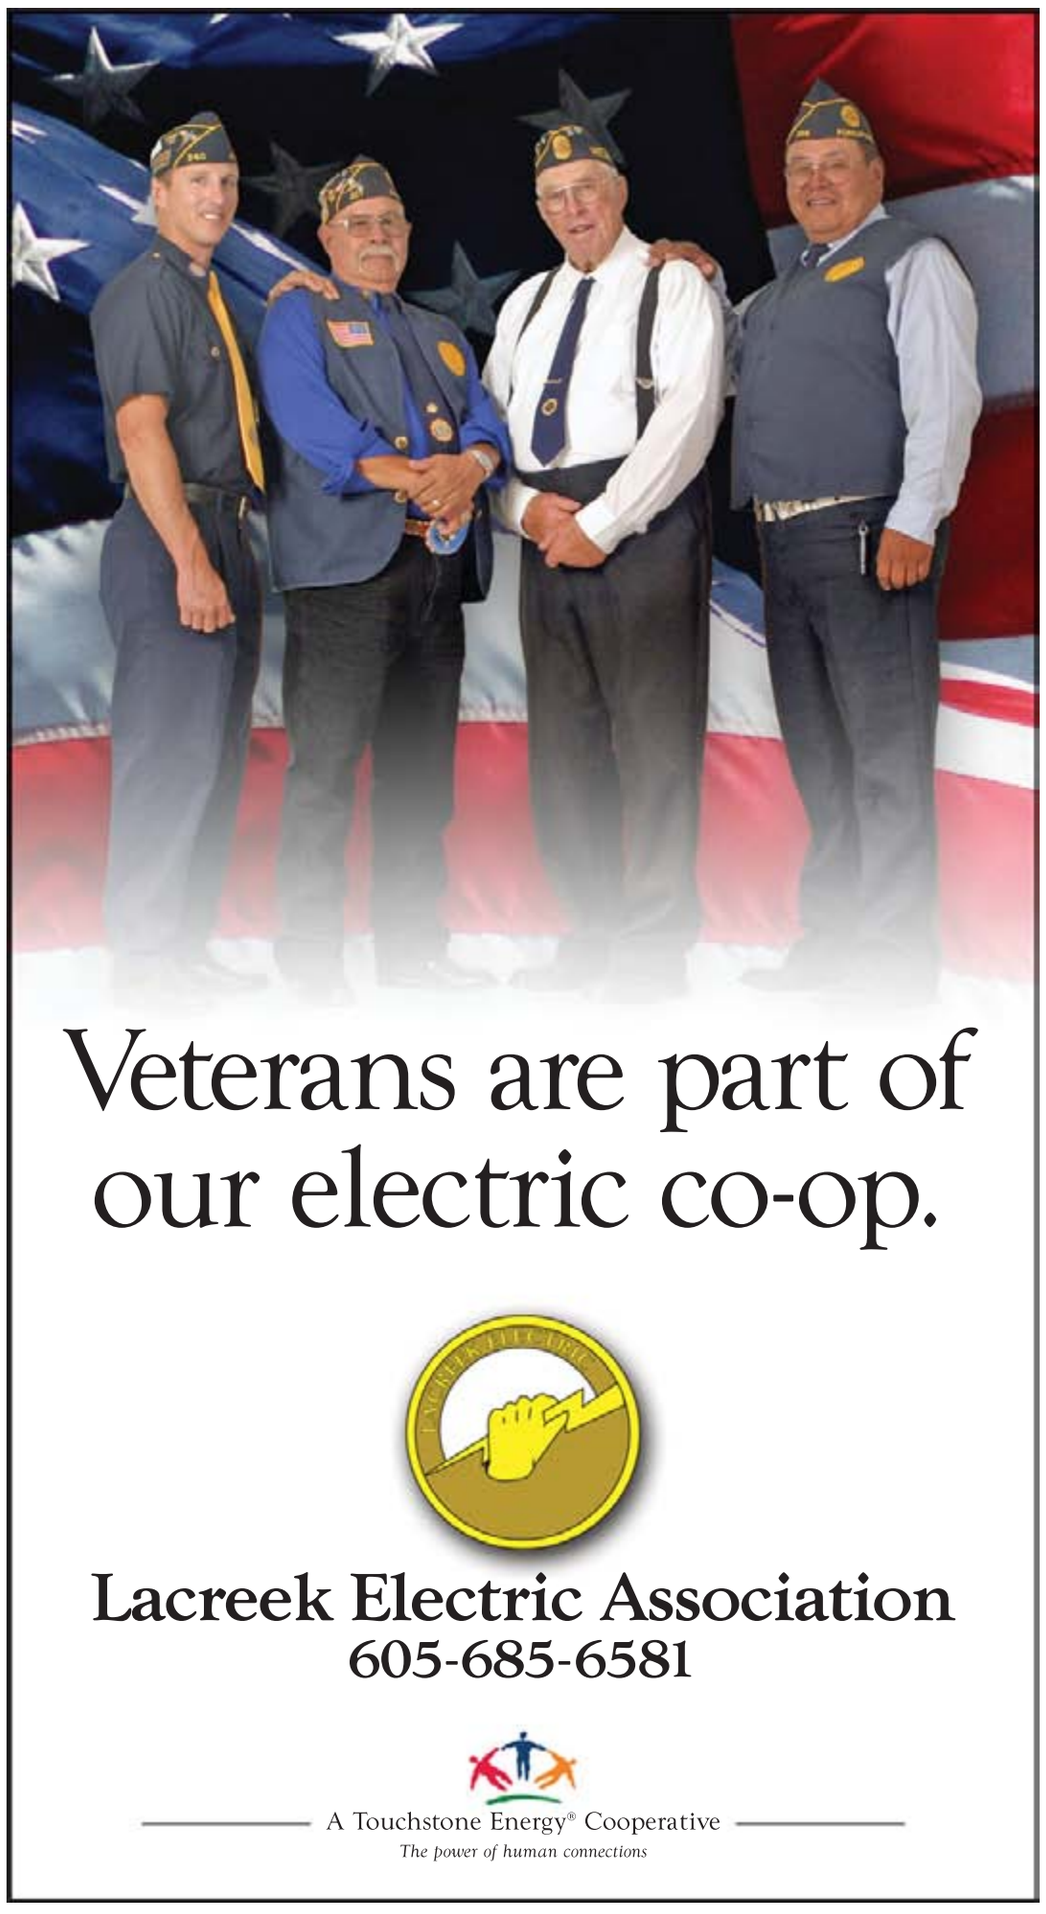
ST. FRANCIS - Harley "Mister" Cortier threw two touchdown passes and Pine Ridge's defense stiffened up at the end for the Thorpes to pick up their first win of the season 16-12 over St. Francis Friday night on the road.

Both teams came into the game sporting 0-5 records, St. Francis scored the only touchdown of the first half as Earl Peneaux hit Michael Farmer on a 30 yard TD pass midway through the first quarter fort a 6-0 Warrior led. The run for two failed and St. Francis held a 6-0 first half lead.

Cortier opened the scoring for Pine Ridge with a 45 yard strike to Ezra Zephier and the Thorpes were on the board early in the third. Cortier carried the ball over for two on a quarterback keeper and Pine Ridge had their second touchdown of the year and an 8-6 lead. Cortier went back to the pass and hit Joe Bissonette on a 15 yard pass play for Pine Ridge's second TD of the game and a 14-6 lead with time running out in the third. Cody Trueblood ran it for two and it was 16-6.

Richard Spotted Tail, St. Francis back-up quarterback, scored on a two yard plunge in the fourth, the pass failed and it was 16-12. The Warriors drove down the field with less than a minute left, had third and 24 and picked up 22 yards only to have their quarterback spike the ball to stop the clock without realizing it was fourth down. Pine Ridge dodged a bullet as the ball got turned over on downs and Pine Ridge ran the time out to ice their first win of the year.

Cortier finished 11 of 20 through the air for 105 yards and two touchdowns. Stan Brewer caught four for 20 yards, Cody Trueblood two for 13 yards, Elliot Brewer two for five yards, Emerson Bob Tail Bear one for seven yards, Zephier one for 45 yards and a touchdown and Bissonette one for 15 yards and a touchdown. Bissonette added 60 yards on the ground on nine carries as well.



Pine Ridge is 1-5 now on the year and looking to win two in a row as they host Crow Creek on Friday for their Homecoming. St. Francis is 0-6 and hosts Cheyenne Eagle Butte Friday night.

Join the fight against domestic violence

By Javier H. Alegree
Special to the Times

ROSEBUD - In honor of Domestic Violence Awareness Month, residents of the Rosebud Reservation are joining together with millions more nation wide to raise awareness and to prevent domestic violence. During the month of October, the White Buffalo Calf Woman Society, Inc. invites all local residents to participate in activities focused on domestic violence awareness and prevention.

Domestic Violence is a serious problem for women, men and children. Nearly one third of American women reported being physically or sexually abused by a husband or boyfriend at some point in their lives.

In the Rosebud Reservation, the number of domestic violence victims showed a staggering increase during 2006. Every year an estimated 3.3 million children are exposed to violence perpetrated against their mothers or female care givers, placing them at high risk for numerous emotional and physical health problems

During the month of October, there will be several events that focus on the ability of men to make a difference. Men - as fathers, brothers, coaches, teachers, uncles, friends and mentors - are in a unique position to prevent domestic violence through their actions and words.

Our message is simple, men can teach boys that violence does not equal strength. The majority of men are willing to talk to children about the importance of healthy, violence - free relationships, if they are asked. Domestic Violence Awareness Month is both an opportunity and a call for men and women to get involved and speak out.

The month's events include: Oct. 17 - Candlelight walk in mission from DSS to the Antelope community center starting at 7 p.m.; Oct. 22 - 23 "Women Strengthening Women" DV conference for survivors and advocates in Rapid City; and Oct. 30 - 5th annual Breast Cancer Awareness Dinner to be held at the council chambers in Rosebud. The White Buffalo Calf Woman Society would like to remind you that all individuals have something to contribute to the fight against Domestic Violence. Together we can end violence in our homes, schools, and communities.

Ask yourself: "What kind of role model are you? Take a stand, speak out… silence will not end the violence!"

For more information, please contact the White Buffalo Calf Woman Society, Inc. at 605-856-2317 or visit www.wbcws.org

The White Buffalo Calf Woman Society, Inc, is a grass-roots community based domestic and sexual violence program that provides an array of services to survivors of violent crimes on the Rosebud Reservation and neighboring communities.

Training helps to expand artist's business and marketing skills

KYLE - During September, the Lakota Funds Wawokiye Business Institute hosted Artist Training by the Springboard for the Arts out of St. Paul, Minn. The Wawokiye Business Institute is working to provide the local artist with opportunity for expanding their market by providing the tools and training needed to move to the next stage of their career.

Springboard for the Arts travels throughout the region providing business skills for artists. The training held in Kyle consisted of three components. The first was Career Planning; they had the artist think about what they wanted to happen with their artistic career and had the artist write a plan to achieve their goals. The second component of the training is Market planning. Taking the time to compose a market plan will help the artist succeed in getting their creations to the respective audiences. The third component is the business plan. The business plan will help clarify in the artist's mind and explain clearly to their stake holders what they are doing.

The training presented Artist to Artist, with the understanding of the struggles the artist may encounter. "Planning is just making a map so you can follow it to your desired destination. We want you to have prosperous and rewarding lives as creative people, and we're here to help you with the map making. Often the solution to anxiousness is gaining control.

Understanding where you want to be and what outcome you desire is the first step on the journey. So take some time to really think about your artistic endeavor now," said Chris Osgood, from Springboard for the arts' training staff.

"I was really impressed by the training; it's what the Wawokiye Business Institute does for all potential small business owners. The most impressive part was the presentation of the lecture and the heart that Chris Osgood put into the training, through the perspective of an Artist to an Artist. It was great!" says Jo White, WBI Director.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I'm confused about so many things. One main thing is my relationship with the love of a good man. But there's a problem in my way of being faithful to him, my best guy friend with benefits.

I'm wondering if I should stop being that kind of friend with this guy? Because he does seem like he's only trying to get close to me so that he could get to know my cousin better.

Is he only that way so he can get with him? And if yes, should we both just stay away from him so there's no family rivalry?

My boyfriend and I are way to serious to let him get in the way.

So I was also wondering are me and my boyfriend going to be together without anything or anyone getting into our relationship or breaking us up ever again?

Confused and don't know what to do

Dear Confused:

Don't give me that. You know exactly what to do. How would it feel if it were your very serious boyfriend who was being intimate with his "good" friend?

If you are not willing nor ready to be exclusive in this relationship then it is fairly obvious that you are not ready for a serious relationship at all.

You ask what is the motive of your "best friend guy with benefits." His motive is fairly simple. You do not fit into his life except as a lover. He is not interested in your life, nor in spending any quality time with you. What does it matter if he is interested in your cousin?

You do not plan on spending the rest of your life with him, and you already have a boyfriend, so making a claim on him and deciding that your cousin shouldn't date him so that you don't fight with her is not only selfish, it's ridiculous. You can't claim, honey, what isn't yours to claim. He is a free agent, without any commitment to you, so let it all go.

If you want a successful relationship with your current boyfriend start by being as true to him as you want him to be to you.

The way I see it, the only person that is trying to get in the way of this relationship is you. Take a look at your motives. Is your best friend your insurance policy, so that if things don't work out you still have someone? Is he an addiction? Is he a way to avoid serious commitment? Is he someone to help make you feel more powerful? Is he a way to claim control of your life so that you won't risk true commitment to your friend?

Better figure it out girl. If you continue you will end up alone.

Dear Anna,

I am writing you because I am looking for some guidance in my crazy, chaotic life. My birthday is 11-27, if that helps any. My questions are geared towards my relationships, my kids, my career, and my health. You see I just broke up with my boyfriend that gave me two kids and now he acts like he does not have to help with them.

Should I give him time or just give up on him? How are our kids handling this whole thing? I miss him a lot, but when we were together we just fought about things that are so petty now.

I just don't know what to think anymore. Will I get my job back or should I go back to school? Do you see me losing any of my weight, or do I have to work harder? Anything you can tell will help.

My crazy life

Dear My crazy life:

Your ex, if we could change him, would be the ideal father. The trick is, of course, that neither you nor I can change him. He is who he is: a man that is not accepting responsibility for his children and is not interacting with them in a loving, fatherly way.

I would go through the courts to establish some monetary support. You need the help, and it is a long time before they are grown.

I see you going back to school. That is very good as the more education you provide yourself with, the better your future. You need to make more money and the best way is to either invent something that will make you rich (and I don't see that in your future), or go back to school, get that degree, and then get a job that pays well.

Your work may call you back in, but again, it would be only temporarily.

Take care of yourself mom. You have children that depend on you, dreams that you want to build, and hope to have a good life. Remember, you are the one that determines the quality of life that you live.

I see you graduating and accomplishing what you need. I also see you taking charge of your life and learning that you can take good care of yourself, learning to be truly independent, and being proud of your accomplishments.

Remember, a man is not a prince charming from the fairy tales who has the main purpose of rescuing you. The next man you choose to fall in love with should be an equal partner - and not perceived as a rescue superhero. Good Luck. You will be okay. I see you eventually helping other women with codependency issues.

~A Mother's Prayer for Her Child~

"Almighty God, who created all things, maker of heaven and earth, you have given us great gifts and blessed us with favors, enough to fill ten thousand storehouses, but it is my gift for whom I pray, I could never imagine asking for a present so grand, yet this mysterious treasure lied sleeping in a crib at the foot of my bed. And so this is my simple prayer:"

"This gift you gave to me, I now give back to you.

Protect, guide and watch over my gift, as only the One who hung the stars in the sky and made each petal of the rose can protect the most precious gifts of all.

Watch over my child, O God, in the name of your child and only son, Jesus. Amen."

Thank you!

Thank you to family, friends, Crow Creek Sioux Tribe, Lode Star Casino Hotel, and my AATCHB co-workers who traveled from far to be there for my family and I during our loss. We appreciated the many gifts of prayer, singing, words of strength, food, flowers, and financial help; they were of great comfort to us.

PINE RIDGE - Last week, Everett Lone Hill passed away, he was 64, a Lakota speaker and traditional singer, the Lakota Nation lost an important source of information and the losses keep adding up as fewer and fewer people speak the Lakota language.

"If you look at Lakota speakers today, they probably average about 65 years of age and our life expectancy is nowhere near 60 even, we have a crisis," said Brian Charging Cloud, director of the Lakota Language Institute at Oglala Lakota

RST election forums help prepare for election

ANTELOPE - Despite a lack of publicity the Lakota Women for Change managed to attract some 50 Antelope community residents as it hosted a forum for candidates running for the office of Rosebud Sioux Tribal council representative from Antelope. Incumbents Scott Herman, Jo Colombe and Robert Moore were joined by candidates Teddie Rae Herman, Shawn Bordeaux and Trent Poignee.

Former RST chairman, Charles Colombe and current RST vice-chairman, Louis "Wayne" Boyd were "in the house" also and were given an opportunity at the end of the forum to present their platforms. Absent were candidates Eddie C. Farmer and Glenn Yellow Eagle.

The Lakota Women for Change on the Rosebud reservation sponsored an RST candidate's forum for those running from Antelope community on Monday night at the community center. From left to right the candidates were Teddie Rae Herman, Shawn Bordeaux, Trent Poignee and incumbent council representatives, Scott Herman, Robert Moore and Jo Colombe.

The Lakota Women for Change were represented by Marcella Prue, forum facliitator, Vi Burnette and Dorothy Marshall. The three had created the questions which were posed to the candidates and which were drawn out of a brown paper bag.

The candidates were seated in a row and after they stated their platform they each stated their reasons for running for office and were given three minutes. Teddie Rae Herman said that the youth and creating a safe house were a couple of her priorities given her work with the youth including a short tenure as the director of the Boys and Girl Clubs of Rosebud. Shawn Bordeaux pointed out that with his master's degree in community planning from the University of Nebraska that he was qualified more than any of the others running for office. The key issue in his view was economic development and addressing the recent suicides.

Trent Poignee, the former general manager at the Rosebud Casino said, "We brought in $3 million into the tribe and now I am working in the bingo department. We need to market outside of our area. We need to work on purchasing more jobs. The Antelope Café doesn't have to change names and the grocery store will create jobs."

It is time for a new generation of leadership, a time for change and time to listen to the people said Poignee.

Incumbent RST council representative, Scott Herman said, "I have a bachelor's in elementary education and a master's degree in educational administration and 13 years of teaching experience. I have been on the council during the 2001-2003 years and it was a learning experience for me….I want to revitalize the diversion program. I am on the education committee, the enrollment committee and the judiciary committee. I know what the youth need and I will bring them forth to the council."

Robert Moore also illustrated a variety of experiences and background that will continue to serve him in his work. He was a legislative assistant to Sen. Tom Daschle, employed at Sinte Gleska University, the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the American Indian College Fund. He said, "It matters how you represent all of the members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe. Listen and hear what they have to say."

Jo Colombe explained that because of the recent RST constitutional convention

Garnier indicted on drug charges in New Mexico

RAPID CITY (AP) - Oglala Sioux Tribe councilman Don Garnier, from Pine Ridge has been indicted in New Mexico on federal drug charges.

Garnier, 38, was arrested Sept. 19 on Interstate 25 near Raton with Anthony Vocu, 42.

They are charged with conspiracy and possession with intent to distribute less than 110 pounds of marijuana.

Garnier and Vocu are scheduled to be arraigned Oct. 25 in U.S. District Court in Albuquerque, according to court documents.

Authorities said they found 21 pounds of marijuana in the trunk of the car Vocu was driving. Garnier was the only passenger.

They were stopped at a checkpoint set up to verify driver's licenses, registrations and proof of insurance. Garner and Vocu acted nervous so officers got a search warrant, according to a police report.

Garnier told officers at the scene he did not know there were drugs in the car.

The Oglala Sioux Tribe's constitution requires officials convicted of a felony to be removed from office. Tribal officials could not be reached for comment.

Billions owed to tribes debated in court

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Interior Department is doing all it can to account for billions of dollars owed to Native American landholders, a department official told a federal court Wednesday in legal arguments over the Indians' 11-year-old lawsuit against the government.

The suit claims the government has mismanaged more than $100 billion in oil, gas, timber and other royalties held in trust from their lands dating back to 1887.

At a hearing in U.S. District Court, James Cason, associate deputy Interior secretary, defended the government's accounting of the Native American trust lands.

The department says it has spent more than $127 million on historical accounting of the trust lands since 2003 and is not delaying or trying to limit government liability, as the plaintiffs suggest.

But Cason said the department has a difficult job when Congress is appropriating limited funds for the accounting.

"There is only so much money we can get out of Congress to do this job," he said. The government contends that the Interior Department has developed a reasonable process for accounting for the money owed and that the lawsuit should not go forward.

But lawyers for the Native Americans, the lawsuit spearheaded by Elouise Cobell, argued that the department is not properly accounting for the money owed to thousands of trustees.

"Hopefully, your honor, after 120 years some of our clients are going to see justice," said Dennis Gingold, the plaintiffs' lead attorney.

Filed in 1996 by Cobell of the Blackfeet tribe, the lawsuit deals with individual Indians' lands. Several tribes have sued separately, claiming mismanagement of their lands.

The government proposed paying $7 billion partly to settle the Cobell lawsuit in March,

SFIS celebrates new school

ST. FRANCIS - Homer White Lance who emceed the ribbon cutting ceremony for the new high school at St. Francis Indian School said it best prior to offering a prayer in Lakota. In his preliminary remarks, he noted, "This is your school. It will represent the Lakota nation….use the tools you have been given."

The ceremony was held on the campus of SFIS last Friday on a beautiful autumn day that saw a number of dignitaries, congressional representatives and contractors who were involved in building the school from the foundation up. After White Lance prayed a beautiful and fitting prayer in Lakota, the school's drum group sang the flag song and followed it up with a Lakota victory song.

The crowd which was comprised mostly of SFIS high school students gathered outside of the entry way as several groups of people took their turn at cutting a red ribbon and ended with the students, themselves, doing the final ribbon cutting.

The floor plan reveals several wings which are dedicated to each grade level and offices for special education, the bilingual department, library and administrative offices.

As the crowd moved indoors, rolls, coffee and other refreshments were available as everyone took their seats and listened to the scheduled speakers, including Ben Black Bear of St. Francis Mission who represented the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Education Interim Board. The students were well behaved throughout the ceremony and showed a good deal of enthusiasm as the dignitaries explained their commitment to building the new facilities.

The most touching testimony came from school construction liaison, James Hogan, who began the project, persevered and saw his work come to completion. He admitted to being a somewhat shy public speaker, but as it turned out his account of the timeline in constructing the school was the best speech of the day as witnessed by the round of applause. His parting words were, "Teachers and students, take care of the building."

The BIA funded school involved several contractors including, Puetz Corporation, DLR Construction and Kurtz Construction.

RST President, Rodney M. Bordeaux, addressed the gathering and spoke of the tribal council's desire to keep the best interest of the school in mind as it has advocated for its funding. He told the students, "Study hard, and make the best of your ability. Listen to your teachers and expand your horizons." Sicangu chief, John Spotted Tail, also reminded the students that a good education is a necessity these days and that he was elected to the new school board. He introduced Hattie Dunham and Rose Cordier who were in attendance and who have been also elected to the new board.

but that was rejected by the plaintiffs, who estimate the government's liability could exceed $100 billion.

Judge James Robertson is presiding in the case after Judge Royce Lamberth was removed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, which said he had lost his objectivity.

The government had asked that Lamberth be replaced after the judge lambasted the Interior Department, writing in a decision that it "is a dinosaur - the morally and culturally oblivious hand-me-down of a disgracefully racist and imperialist government that should have been buried a century ago."

that the enrollment ordinance needed to be improved while working at the national level to assist the tribe. She said, "When we sit in council there are 20 of us and each one plays a vital role in decisions made in there…, give me another opportunity to be a voice in the council." Promoting tribal members can help to develop businesses and economic development will be at the top of her list added Colombe.

During the next juncture of the forum, the candidates were each given a different question to which they were to respond. The questions ranged from goals, separation of powers, and economic development to a question of an alcohol and drug-free lifestyle.

Former RST chairman, Charles Colombe noted that he had spent 8 years as a council representative and two years as the chairman. He was concerned there was no geriatric clinic and that often times an elder has to wait if someone is intoxicated and being treated ahead of them.

Current RST Vice-Chairman, Louis Wayne Boyd, said that he has been waiting for someone to come along with a plan as to where we want to be in five years. He said, "Thank you for putting this on. I want to ask the community for their support…voting is more than your right."

In other election related activities, the RST Suicide Task Force will be sponsoring a forum for candidates on Thursday at the SGU multipurpose building from 3 to 6 p.m.

KINI FM radio will carry the forum and also will report on the RST general election next Thursday on Oct. 25.

College, "we struggle from okiciyapisni, not working together, we need to come up with a plan and figure out how to work together."

In 1990, Harold Salway, after being elected as tribal president, pushed to have the council select an executive board of all Lakota speakers and encouraged the council to conduct the business of the Lakota Nation in Lakota; not enough members of the council were comfortable in the Lakota language so it did not last long.

Oceti Wakan, a small non-profit organization in Calico, received a small ANA grant to research the health of the Lakota language on Pine Ridge Reservation. After surveying nearly 8,000 people in communities across the reservation, the results of the study proved to be very disturbing.

"We found that two per cent of children from new born to six could speak the language and less than five per cent of those children from 7-17 years of age were able to speak the language," said Cindy Catches, "many of the communities felt that many more of our children spoke the language."

The Lakota Language Consortium has developed curriculum materials over the last several years which are used by more than 30 schools across Lakota country; they just completed an assessment of 5,000 students in those schools measuring their understanding of the language, this was a pre-test and at the end of the school year they plan to do a post-test.

"The results are not good," said Wil Meya, "there is so much work that needs to be done; children are 10 years behind where they should be in Lakota language, its like looking at a class of high school students who are doing algebra and the students only know addition, the sheer ground that needs to be covered is overwhelming."

Many people agree that the language is in trouble, there is not always agreement on how to deal with that situation.

"We are just not working together to re-vitalize the language, there is too much territoriality, issues of ownership, trust, debates over orthography, it is because of culture changes," said Charging Cloud, "there are three w's - wonawizi-jealousy, waicihaha-make fun of and wokipajin-being negative not positive."

This short piece is only the introduction, next week we will try to define the problem better, look to the future and possible strategies, look at what people are doing today, whether establishing immersion programs, working one on one with infants and toddlers or wonder what our larger institutions are doing. Join us next week for part two.

AIM leader Vernon Bellecourt dead at 75

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) - Vernon Bellecourt, who fought against the use of Indian nicknames for sports teams as a longtime leader of the American Indian Movement, has died at age 75.

Bellecourt died last Saturday at Abbott Northwestern Hospital of complications from pneumonia, said his brother, Clyde Bellecourt, a founding member of the militant American Indian rights group.

Vernon Bellecourt - whose Objibwe name WaBun-Inini means Man of Dawn - was a member of Minnesota's White Earth band and was an international spokesman for the AIM Grand Governing Council based in Minneapolis.

Clyde Bellecourt helped found AIM as a militant group in 1968 and Vernon Bellecourt soon became involved, taking part in the 1973 occupation of Wounded Knee.

He was present only briefly during the 71-day standoff with federal agents, serving mostly as a spokesman and fundraiser, Clyde Bellecourt said.

He was also involved as a negotiator in AIM's 1972 occupation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs headquarters in Washington as part of the Trail of Broken Treaties caravan.

In recent years, Bellecourt had been active in the fight against American Indian nicknames for sports teams as president of the National Coalition on Racism in Sports and Media.

He was arrested in Cleveland during the 1997 World Series and again in 1998 during protests against the Cleveland Indians' mascot, Chief Wahoo. Charges were dropped the first time and he was never charged in the second case.

Clyde Bellecourt said his brother had been in Venezuela about four weeks ago to meet with President Hugo Chavez to discuss Chavez' program for providing heating assistance to American Indian tribes.

He fell ill around the time of his return, Clyde Bellecourt said.

Finding My Voice

By Dana Lonehill

I am Lakota

Dana Badmilk

I am Lakota.

That is who I am.

I was asked if I even knew what it meant to be Lakota, since I am only half and not a full blood.

Lakota is in my blood. Being Lakota has given me the pride and spirit I have been searching for all my life. I can finally say I am Lakota and Proud.

I admit, it is a hard life but only if you concentrate on the negative and I try not to be like that.

I don't think that just because the government can keep track of how much blood of mine is actually Lakota with registered paperwork and by stamping a number on me like they do to dogs in the AKC, can define exactly how much Lakota I am. For even though, I have French blood and Filipino blood in my veins, I am Lakota. I was born and raised Lakota. I was taught the Lakota ways...ways that I wished in my youth I hadn't been so hasty and stubborn to push away.

Being Lakota means to be brave, disciplined, and courageous while living humbly.

Bring Lakota is to be patient and tolerant, respectful and compassionate. You must live your life with understanding of others and be generous.

Lakota's accept each other, they don't want and wish for each other to fall or fail.

There are seven sacred laws of the Lakota Way of Life and this is how we live. In these ways that are ours there is no room for greed, or dis-respect.

I don't think that my blood quantum can show you how much Lakota I really am.

I am not perfect, I am not a saint, but I will always be Lakota.

For it is in my heart, in my soul, in my spirit and I live my life being a Lakota every single day.

And it is a beautiful life.

Letters to the Editor

Tribal council does not care about our rights, they have sovereign immunity

Dear Editor,

I want to say something about what the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council is doing to our tribal members, like the wrong that was done to Missy Bartling and myself.

I want her to know that I join in support of her to fight the nature of the beast (as was once put to me by a council representative) and will do what I can to bring awareness and educate our people of the wrong doings that is occurring on a daily basis within many tribal facets.

The same thing happens to veterans within our ranks. We do not see any hiring preferences for veterans although a resolution is in place.

We also have graduates from Sinte Gleska University or other colleges being overlooked in hiring. On many occasions we will hear political candidates proclaim that they stand for the people but when they get elected all you witness is human rights violations. We proclaim that we are against violence because it is not a Lakota tradition but then go and violently violate our tribal member's rights.

The tribal council does not care about your rights because they have sovereign immunity.

Every time they violate our tribal member's rights then they have eroded our sovereign immunity. Sovereign immunity belongs to you the people not the tribal council. Sovereign immunity is meant to protect the tribe from out side attacks not to attack our own people.

And if sovereign immunity is used against you the people then it is abuse of power.

So when the tribal council abuses the people's power where do we go for recourse?

Do we go to the tribal council for recourse?
Or do we take them to ethics or grievance?
Will ethics or grievance make a decision against the council?

Some day the federal government will take look at what tribes are doing with your sovereign immunity?

Our tribe can say we are using it on our people!

There are no laws in place to protect the people only laws to protect the Tribal Council.

Those of you who are supporting past tribal council representatives are supporting these violations. No wonder there is very little legislative activity going on in the Tribal Council.

I don't even think that there is new policies or laws put in place during this administration because the Rosebud Sioux Tribe is in a perpetual crisis mode.

There is so much crisis going on in tribal government that there is no energy to do anything else.

We are on a downward spiral for a real wake up call when it comes to tribal revenue that our tribal members are being laid off from the projects that are funded by the casino revenue.

There is talk of eliminating some P.L. 638 programs.

At this point in time there is no job stability for any employee of the tribe. There is no stability for tribal government. There is no future for our tribe unless we develop the businesses that will create jobs and housing for our people.

There is no hope out there in the communities because there are no jobs or housing out there in the communities.

Should you ask what is tribal government doing for our people or to our people?

The Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council convened an emergency session to address the pressing issue of mining companies infiltrating the 1851/1868 Treaty Territories.

Council delegates representing six of the eight Sioux Bands were present to discuss resolutions to protect the next seven generations of the Great Sioux Nation.

The Treaty Council voted unanimously to forever ban open pit and in-situ leach uranium mining and declare the Treaty Territories a nuclear-free zone. Further, the treaty council committed to fight against existing Crow Butte, Inc. Uranium Mine near Crawford, Neb, the Powertech Uranium Mine and Neutron Uranium Mine operations in the southern Black Hills. The Council also endorsed a planned uranium summit to educate tribal members of the environmental and health risks associated with uranium mining. And the final action came when the Treaty Council voted to ban Native American Energy Group from the Treaty territories.

Environmental activists applauded the Treaty Council for upholding their obligation to protect and preserve the Great Sioux Nation Treaty Territories.

Following the "Yellowcake" Road

The Oglala Lakota Band has taken legal action to exclude Native American Energy Group, a New York-based energy company that has proposed uranium mining exploration and development on the Pine Ridge Reservation. On Tuesday, Oct. 9, 2007, the court action came to an abrupt halt when a traditional Lakota warrior society forcibly removed N.A.E.G. officials from the reservation.

After weeks of testimony in a show-cause hearing to exclude N.A.E.G., Oglala Sioux Tribal President John Steele testified that he is opposed to uranium mining and does not know why the energy company is still on the reservation. Steele and Janis have testified that they were aware that uranium mining and exploration is illegal on the reservation.

What Columbus Day means to me

Wanblii Ake Glii

This past nation wide celebration of Columbus Day the "discoverer of America" was a day 49 out of 50 states observed; South Dakota was the exception. It was also a day of definite proof of the distorted thinking Euro-American people have of their history. This yearly event told me two things about the citizens of the U.S. and other countries with European roots who support this day.

Either they are blind and don't know what they are celebrating, or they do, and they rejoice every year to observe over five centuries of conquest, racism and genocide.

Those who feel it's a day to celebrate think it's a date that brought new beginnings of freedom, hope and opportunity. But for those who make a conscious effort not to celebrate it, know it marks the day murder, slavery and poverty began for indigenous people.

The truth is that before Columbus first set foot in the Americas, the Indigenous population was estimated to be around 90 to 112 million people in all of North, Central and South America combined.

Within the first 150 years after Columbus landed, an estimated 85 percent of the entire population was destroyed. And by the 1900's over 95 percent of the Indigenous people from North to South America were deceased. According to the U.S. Bureau of the Census at that time, only 237,000 Native people were left surviving within America's borders. In all, somewhere between 85 and 105 million Indigenous were gone in the entire Western Hemisphere. The remaining less than 5 percent were left to starve, kept in check, controlled and made to live in oppression and forced to survive against genocidal rules of cruel European controlled governments.

Columbus was an ignorant man whose mind and spirit were consumed with twisted and perverted religious beliefs born out of a thousand years of intolerance and greed. This kind of model thinking is what spelled doom for our ancestors. It was this kind of European "wisdom" that shaped the nations of these lands and is still so prevalent and evident in the world's troubles today.

The past several hundred years of non-Native nations honoring a man who lead the way to the Americas, and started off the greatest Holocaust in the history of the world, by beginning the extermination of nearly 8 million natives on the first "discovered" island, is an example of the ignorance of today's people.

Notes From Indian Country

By Tim Giago

What an honor it is to be insulted

Two things stuck in my mind while watching the New York Yankees lose the last game they played in Cleveland. The first is the three fans the television cameras panned every now and then sitting in the bleachers wearing feathers and hideous painted faces. This detestable display is meant to honor American Indians? Wow, what an honor. Pardon me if I am insulted.

The second was the racist cartoon character of a buck-toothed, red faced, caricature of an Indian logo prominently displayed upon the caps of the Cleveland baseball team. What if that dreadful cartoon character had depicted an African American, a Hispanic American or an Asian American? Would members of these ethnic minorities find this cartoon character to be obnoxious? I think so.

I suppose it ironic that the Cleveland team now travels to play in Boston against the Red Sox. History taught us that while objecting to taxation without representation a bunch of Bostonians painted themselves up as Indians, donned the attire they had probably taken from the bodies of Indians that had been slaughtered in New England, and raided a ship tied up in the harbor in order to dump its cargo of tea.

Did these "patriots" dress up as Indians to honor Indians or did they mimic Indians in order to place the blame for their deeds upon them? History will also tell you that when the Mormons massacred about 120 settlers traveling through Mormon territory at Mountain Meadows on September 11, 1857 they first dressed themselves as Indians.

Hey, we all know that no respectable Mormon would take part in a massacre of innocent white men, women and children, so therefore it had to be those savage Indians, right? Everybody should see the movie September Dawn about this terrible massacre. Ask Mitt Romney about it.

Many years ago, when I owned the newspaper Indian Country Today, I had my cartoonist, Thom Little Moon, an Oglala Lakota; draw a cartoon using the Cleveland baseball team logo as the model. He drew the same character as an African American, Hispanic and as an Asian American. The caption was, "Now you know how American Indians feel."

A poster printed by The National Conference on Christians and Jews, an organization in Minneapolis, MN, portrayed the flags of the New York Fighting Jews, Chicago Blackskins, the San Francisco Orientals and the St. Paul Caucasians. The poster can still be seen hanging on the walls of many Indian organizations and tribes. The poster also said, "Now you know how American Indians feel." But do you really know how we feel?

To most American Indians it is absolutely abhorrent for a professional football team to use the color of their skin as their team mascot. As a matter of fact, we oftentimes refer to the mascot of the Washington professional football team as the "R" word because to us it is as hideous as the "N" word is to African Americans. I ask you, how can a supposed civilized nation in the year 2007 still use a racist logo and name like "Redskin" and feel that it is an honor to Native Americans? What a terrible way to be honored!

When the four minority media organizations, the National Association of Black Journalists, National Association of Hispanic Journalists, National Association of Asian Journalists, and the Native American Journalists Association meet at the UNITY Convention in Chicago in 2008, I pray that the use of American Indians as mascots for America's fun and games is high on the list of subjects they bring to the table. So far the Indian people of America have fought this battle alone. UNITY should know that racism in any form against any minority is racism that impacts all minorities and makes it much easier for racists to extend their form of racism to other races.

Perhaps Indians are alone in their fight to shed the dubious honor bestowed upon them by sports team owners, but it is indeed, an honor that should be equally shared by all minorities.

I ask anyone reading this column, whether you hate what I am writing here or not, just open your mind when you watch the playoffs between the Red Sox and the Indians and ask yourself if the grinning caricature of an American Indian is racist.

Replace that face with another racial minority and see how the shoe fits. And if you saw the Washington professional football game where the team's fanatical fans painted a pig red, planted feathers on its head, and chased it around the football field at halftime and were not repelled by it, you wouldn't know racism if it bit you on the behind.

American Indians are human beings and not mascots for America's high schools, colleges or professional sports teams' fun and games.

(Tim Giago, an Oglala Lakota, was born, raised and educated on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota. He was a Nieman Fellow at Harvard in the Class of 1991 and founder of The Lakota Times and Indian Country Today newspapers. Citizens and their countries, as you can see, either blindly or knowingly look at this date as a day to honor a great navigator who founded the Americas. But in reality he only accidentally discovered the lands indigenous people had lived on for tens of thousands of years already.

Thinking he was in India, he began calling the island's inhabitants "Indians," which we've definitely been labeled.

So this date, Oct. 12, 1492, really represents everything ever done wrong to the indigenous people of the Americas, past and present; it is a day not only all indigenous people should know the truth about, but also the rest of the 49 states as well.

Red Cloud holds on for sixth straight win, squeaks by Little Wound 26-24

PINE RIDGE - Red Cloud's Billy Scott, a 178 pound senior tailback, carried the ball 26 times for 229 yards and two touchdowns before leaving the game with a high ankle sprain early in the fourth quarter; Little Wound closed the gap to two points and had an opportunity to put another score on the board and pull the game out in the last minute and a half before Dave Giago forced his second fumble of the game, knocking the ball out of Mustang quarterback, Trin In The Woods hand allowing Cord Tibbitts to cover the ball and secure Red Cloud's 26-24 win on Friday.

"It was an ugly win, we did not play well overall," said Keith Ferguson, Red Cloud head coach, "Andrew Twiss, our best tackler and defensive leader was ineligible for the game and we struggled to cover their short passing game, we just didn't seem to have any sense of urgency-it was probably Little Wound's most important game after losing to us by two last year yet our focus didn't seem to be there."

The Crusaders rolled up 353 yards on the ground on 42 carries while Little Wound's In the Woods completed 10 of 14 passes for 176 yards and two touchdowns.

Neither team scored in the first quarter, both teams turned the ball over while they were testing each other's strengths and weaknesses. Finally on his ninth carry, Bill Scott rolled around the left end and rumbled down the field for a 71 yard touchdown, Red Cloud's fullback, Wade O'Bryan, ran up the middle for the two point conversion and it was 8-0 for Red Cloud. A little over a minute later, Trin In The Woods located Casey Montileaux behind the defense and hit him for a 60 yard pass play for a touchdown, Jacee Mesteth ran it over for two and the teams were tied up at eight a piece.

Late in the second quarter, Jeremy Blacksmith connected with Art Vitalis on a 23 yard pass for a touchdown, the run failed giving Red Cloud a 14-8 lead. The half ended as Montileaux intercepted a halfback pass thrown by Scott.

Halfway through the third quarter, Scott ran off the right tackle for a nine yard score, the run for two failed and it was Red Cloud up 20-8. In The Woods came right back and hit Spur Pourier on an 11 yard toss, Mesteth scored two on a run and it was 20-16. Scott went down with an injury and Dominick LeBeaux, his replacement hustled around the left end and went 69 yards for a touchdown and it was 26-16 early in the fourth for Red Cloud. After Red Cloud gambled on a fourth and eight and lost, Little Wound got the ball on the Red Cloud 31 yard line and Michael Pretty Voice Crane finished off the Mustang drive with a five yard run for a touchdown, Mesteth's run for two closed the gap 26-24 for the Crusaders.

Red Cloud couldn't move the ball on offense and punted it to Little Wound where they ended up with good field position at their own 48 yard line with just under two minutes to go. After an incomplete pass, In The Woods rolled out to the right looking for an open receiver when Dave Giago came from behind and knocked the ball out of his grasp; Cord Tibbitts recovered the fumble and Red Cloud ran out the clock to pick up their sixth straight win of the season and move their record to 6-1.

"Today, practice went well, we need to start Thursday's game with some intensity, play hard on defense and go into the game feeling confident that we have the team that can play with any these teams," said Ferguson looking ahead to Red Cloud's final regular season game at Todd County Thursday evening, "we need a good game to help move us into the playoffs with some momentum."

In addition to Scott, Red Cloud benefited from Dominick LeBeaux's 72 yards on three carries, Art Vitalis chipped in 38 yards on eight carries, O'Bryan added 11 yards on three carries and freshman Kiley Weston had three yards on two carries. Blacksmith was five for 11 for 60 yards with one touchdown and no interceptions. Giago caught four passes for 37 yards and Vitalis had one reception for 23 yards and a touchdown.

Little Wound's ground game suffered from five quarterback sacks; Kevin Hunter ran 11 times for 79 yards, Mesteth carried 12 times for 25 yards and Montileaux once for 19 yards.

Little Wound is now 4-3 and hosts Bennett County on Thursday at 1 p.m.,

Bennett County runs over Falcons 46-22

MARTIN - Bennett County rolled up 245 yards on the ground during their Homecoming game Friday, scoring five touchdowns along the way as they earned their sixth win of the season 46-22 over the Todd County Falcons.

CJ Spotted Tail finished eight of 14 through the air for125 yards and opened the scoring for both teams with a two yard run in the second quarter, point after failed and Todd County was up 6-0.

Bennett County scored their first touchdown on a Clint Sasse interception which he ran back for a 24 yard touchdown and the game was tied at six each. Nathan Novak scored on a four yard run to end the first half and came back early in the third to reel off a 40 yard run, Austin Haynes pass to DJ Toczek for two put "Gunner Krogman has only been able to play sparingly after receiving a high ankle sprain in the St. Francis game," said Bob Kornely, Todd County head coach,

"We miss him on both offense and defense, he tweaked his other ankle which happens when you are favoring one ankle; we have two key lineman out, we lost some players to eligibility and we are down to 18-20 players and that is just not enough when playing 11 man football, seven are freshman," said Kornely.

The Falcons closed the gap to 20-14 after Michael Neiss scored on a 43 yard run and Spotted Tail hit Jaden Allen for two.

Toczek finished off the third quarter with touchdown runs of 29 and 16 yards, John Slattery's one extra point kick made it 33-14.Novak added a third running score on another 40 yard run and Sasse got his second defensive TD with a fumble recovery and a 30 yard return for a score to give Bennett County a 46-14 lead. Canku One Star closed out the game's scoring with a 27 yard run for a score, Spotted Tail hit Allen again for two and the final score ended up 46-22 for Bennett County.

"We had some players really step up though, Neiss had 238 all purpose yards, 59 rushing, 58 receiving and 121 return yards; One Star was over 100 yards with 107 on 14 carries and Spotted Tail hit eight of 14 for 125 yards," said Kornely.

Todd County is now 5-2 and hosts Red Cloud on Thursday evening. Bennett County is 6-1 and travels to Little Wound-Crazy Horse on Thursday.

American Horse School students clean up community building

By Jodi Richards
American Horse School

American Horse School students from the 6th to 7th grade painted the Allen community building. The building has been defaced by graffiti. The building houses the senior citizens center, police dispatch center and the post office. Trudell Shot With Arrow, Jacob Bad Wound, Duane Standing Soldier, and Chris Hawkins help with the painting.

ALLEN - The American Horse School 6th-8th graders have been very busy this past month.

They have been working hard in Math with Christine Julius-Poor Bear and Julie Bad Wound, in language arts with Jennifer May and Cornell Ruff, in reading with Shilo Smith. Consuelo Means has done a marvelous job of filling in for Shilo and Dana Washington is our "new kid on the block" and has helped Consuelo in reading and everywhere else she has been asked to, social studies with Daryl Besco and science with Zach Krahn.

The students begin the day in their homeroom and then rotate classes throughout the day.

The staff and students congratulate the coaches, football players, volleyball players, cross country participants and the cheerleaders. They have done a super job of playing hard, conditioning, and being respectful to themselves and the teams they have played. We are sad that the season is over, but look forward to conditioning and the basketball season.

Gear-Up had a parent meeting with 22 parents attending on Oct. 12. We talked about high school and college preparation and financial assistance along with activities we did last year and activities that we are looking forward to this year. We had ten parents and relatives of 7th and 8th grade students win $20 in our drawing! Vinnette, Daneen, Grace, Neal, Waylon, Marty, Justina, John, and Lavina. Thank you for attending we will keep you informed of other meetings.

The 8th grade parents had a meeting with Wally Waters and had an Indian Taco sale on Oct.17, Wally and Lenore donated star quilts for a raffle and I donated $50 for the raffle.

The next parent meeting is Oct. 25 at 5 p.m. Please attend, they are taking any and all donations for the concession stand. Thank you for supporting your child.

We had our Fall Festival on Oct. 11. It was a great hit, some of our students helped with booths and all of the 6th through 8th graders were assigned students from our Pre-K through 4th grade. They took the students around to all of the booths that were run by the teachers and assistants, parents were then left to visit, and do the cake/ fruit bowl walk The 6th-8th grade students did a super job helping all of the younger students, visit every booth and "win" lots of prizes. We want to commend them for giving up their time and helping their younger relatives, sharing and caring make the world go round!

The students have been working on Civic Responsibility. Every student will participate during the year. One of our projects is to decorate the Senior Citizen Center each month. Dana Washington assisted Lalaina Charger, Nailah Washington, Frances Around Him, Tianna Yellow Hair, Corey "Jorge" Whirlwind Horse, Myron Dillion, Debra Archuleta, and Jonnie Yellow Hawk in putting up the "Spooktacular" Decoration for October.

Our largest project has been the painting over the graffiti on the Allen Post Office and Dispatch Building and Senior Citizen Center. Cornell Ruff along with Thomas Tools, Tamarra DuBray, Kiona Gay, Nailah Washington, and Jorge Whirlwind Horse began by using white paint on the walls. Then a dark red was chosen for the rocks. Contessa Vasquez, Christina Long Wolf, Duane Standing Elk, Jacob Bad Wound, Jaelen Thunder Bull, Frances Around Him, Debra Arch-uleta, Brandon Arch-uleta, and Kiona Gay are the students who have worked on the painting of the red rocks. Charlene May, post master, thought the red looked nice on the rock and covered the graffiti so she contacted the Senior Citizen President and asked if it would be okay if all of the rock on the building could be painted. The go ahead was given and Cornell Ruff continued painting with the following students assisting: Trudell Shot With Arrow, Jacob Bad Wound, Duane Standing Soldier, Chris Hawkins, The work will continue until all of the rock is painted. We are hoping the building will stay free from graffiti.

Another project we are working on is having students visit the Head Start once a week and read books to the students, we will also be doing this with our pre-K students at American Horse School.

American Horse Middle School students and staff take pride in helping within their community. If you have any projects that we could help with please stop in or call me and let me know. Jodi Richards 6th to 8th grade team leader.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I sure enjoy reading your column and have done so for the past few years.

I hope you can help me with an answer to my son's issue. He abuses alcohol and has done so since he was very young. When he was 17 he was told by a doctor that his liver is damaged. That didn't stop his drinking. As of today, he served time for his 2nd DUI and is currently in treatment. He has underlying issues that he can't seem to get over and says this is why he is drinking. I love my son and want him to get help before anything else happens to him. He is 22 years old.

When he started kindergarten he didn't like school at all. He wanted to stay home and help his grandfather with wood cutting etc., He didn't finish high school as he hung out with the wrong crowd. He dropped out of school in the 11th grade.

Don't get me wrong, he is a nice person, he's gentle with his nieces and other young children. He's a patient man, helpful to his grandmothers, but as soon as he has alcohol in his system, we see another side of him. I have 5 children and he seems to be the one that keeps me going and worries me more than the other 4 children. He knows how to push my buttons, so to speak.

The questions I have are: what does his future look like, will he get his GED ? Find a job? What about his alcoholism?

I know when he returns from treatment, he'll still have all this negativity around him and it just may return to that same environment. As a mother I want nothing but the best for him and would do anything within my reach to help him. Help!!!

Worried Sick

Dear Worried Sick:

You are right mom, returning to the same environment, without any new skills and involved with the same friends does not give him a very good chance at beginning a new path of sobriety in life. Your son will eventually wake up, take a different path, and find a role in the world for himself that is more productive.

I would like to suggest to you that when they have family night at his treatment facility you go and voice these concerns. It may be part of what helps him in the future to realize that he does have control over himself, that he can lead a productive life, that he can succeed, and that it all, really, no matter what way you look or go, it is all up to him. He is responsible.

Every one of us has challenges that we grow up with, live with, and either overcome or allow to take us down. Every one is capable of making the right and better choice. You son feels disempowered, and feels that he doesn't have open doors to life awaiting him. He doesn't feel that he is powerful on this earth and in his own life.

There are many people in the world that do not fit into standard education. Sometimes, they are confronted with ADD or ADHD/ focus problems. Sometimes they are learning challenged or socially challenged. You son is a hands-on learner.

I do see him eventually finding a path to apprentice in the construction industry. Unless he is shown a different door to his future, he will fall back into old patterns for quite a few years.

The different door, mom, may be through tough love. You cannot allow him to continue to disrupt your environment and the environments of the rest of your relatives including grandmothers.

It is not easy loving and feeling responsible for a child that cannot see the forest for the trees. I know how much you love him and want to rescue him from himself - but you cannot. He has to be allowed to figure it out. He is not any less than any other human being and the Creator did not leave him out of free will and the right to success.

He has chosen a little bit more difficult path and he has a stubborn streak combined with fear of not being equal to the challenge of being a full adult and taking care of himself.

Insist that he has an option: He can return to his home or his grandmother's home if he signs up for training of some sort (Vo Tech, OLC, Job Corps, etc.). You make the rule that will push him out into a world of hope, not one that places him right back into the tornado of social dysfunction and poverty that he is currently enmeshed in.

If he refuses to comply (which is what it looks like is the probable path right now), pray and know that he will find the right path by the time he is in his early thirties. His liver will slow him down, and eventually aid him in making better choices.

Please work with his treatment center to help him have a better path when he completes treatment. In the meantime, pray. I will also pray for you, your family, and your son.

Dear Anna,

How are you doing today? Hope you are in good health with all these questions you guide us with. I wanted to ask you about my relationship future.

I went back to college and I think I am doing good so far. As you told me the last time that I was headed for something that I was honestly not ready for. I want to know about my ex-boyfriend. will we ever be together again? He is a little bit older than I am. And I have been trying to actually get over him then when I think he has forgotten my phone rings and there he is on the other end I try so hard to not answer but I have to. I call him also but I think I get him in trouble with his girlfriend. Will it just be better if we were just friends?

Wondering about my ex

Dear Wondering:

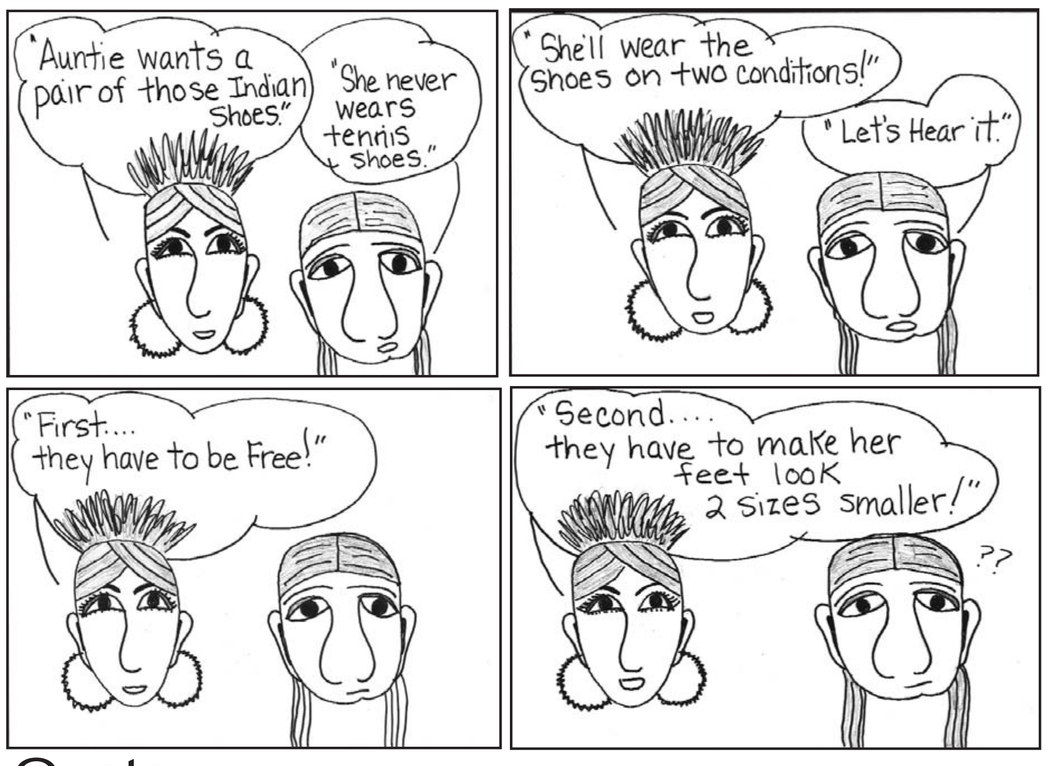
You must have a sneaking suspicion of how I am going to answer. Leave your ex boyfriend alone. He calls when he wants some. That is not love.

He is not faithful to his current girl-friend, he wasn't faithful to you, and anyone that "hooks-up" with him is going to face that same reality.

Let him go - you can do better, and by next spring or early summer you will. Don't be fooled by idle talk of how sexy you are - it is not about the heart, it is about something else altogether.

You are a smart woman, use that head, be your best friend, and give yourself the same advice you would give a good friend if they were addicted to emotional abuse.

Going to school is wonderful. Be proud of yourself as you are creating a very good road for yourself in the future.



It will be wonderful for you to have a degree, a good job and income, and the respect of your community for your hard work and life contribution. Good Luck. Don't be a fool...and keep on studying!

PINE RIDGE - Sixteen years ago, the St. Paul Public School's Board of Education spent $3 million to open a new school with the idea of addressing their "Indian" student's high dropout rates and low academic achievement levels. As the school's Cultural Resource Specialist, I found myself sort of holding my breath for the three years I worked there.

I was thoroughly convinced that I would not see such a school in my lifetime; I could not wholly accept this new educational development. My apprehension has deep roots in the racial bigotry and apathy affecting the better part of my life.

I could not help but think that the BOE would realize they had made a grave mistake and close the school down.

Mounds Park All-Nations School is still going though. It houses two schools: the World Cultures and Languages (K-6) and the American Indian Languages and Cultures (K-8).

At this time, I have yet to find out if the

Rosebud's Turtle Creek Crossing grocery store becoming reality

$5 million dedicated for building

MISSION - Rosebud Sioux tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, and his Chief of Staff, Michael LaPointe hosted a ground breaking for the Turtle Creek Crossing tribal grocery store last Friday. A host of invited guests came together at a location approximately two miles west and on the north side of U. S. Highway 18.

RST council representatives Ken LaDeaux, Cyril "Whitey" Scott and RST treasurer, Mary Greaves also were on hand to break ground as well as RST vice-president, Louis Wayne Boyd.

Jeanie Faber of Sen. Thune's Sioux Falls office addressed the gathering and noted that the senator was in Washington, D.C. and will be here when the grand opening for the store is held.

As a tribal grocery store it could have been located in the agency town of Rosebud, however, the relatively heavy flow of daily traffic on Highway 18 warrants its location as an ideal outlet.

The name "Turtle Creek Crossing" is an original designation by the RST tribal council as the future store is to be constructed close to an area where painted turtles are known to cross the highway during certain times of the year.

LaPointe emceed the event, while calling upon Sicangu medicine man Roy Stone to offer an invocation as way of blessing the location in the Lakota way. The four directions song or tatuya topa olowan was also sung. LaPointe said, "The goal is to develop the economy and keep the money here. There is $132 million in personal income generated here and 84 percent of it leaves here. The store represents what we want to do."

The Sicangu Lakota Warriors posted the colors and their presence and contribution was acknowledged by LaPointe.

Officials from Super Valu were also invited as well as representatives from the Sen. Johnson updates tribal chairmen on federal funding bills

By Vicky Wicks
Times Correspondent

L-R: President of Rosebud tribe Rodney Bordeaux, Mike Jandreau, chairman of Lower Brule tribe and other tribal chairmen met with Sen. Johnson to discuss federal legislation affecting tribes.

RAPID CITY - South Dakota Senator Tim Johnson met with tribal leaders recently in Rapid City to update them on federal funding bills currently moving through Congress.

The private meeting was held at Johnson's invitation. John Yellowbird Steele, president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, said afterward that Johnson talked with them for about an hour and said President George W. Bush would likely veto certain spending bills affecting Native tribes.

Reauthorization for the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act has been approved by the Indian Affairs committee and will soon be brought up by banking. Johnson serves on both committees.

If this version of the act is passed, funding will continue for housing block grants, and tribes will have greater flexibility in self-governance, according to Charles Galbraith, Johnson's legislative assistant in his Washington, D.C. office.

Reauthorization of the Indian Healthcare Improvement Act is also under consideration by the Senate and has passed both finance and Indian affairs committees. Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid has promised to get the bill to the floor of the Senate before the end of the year, Galbraith said.

South Dakota Department of Transportation. Deputy Assistant Secretary of Transportation, Kevin Tveidt, was accompanied by June Hanson and engineer Doug Sherman.

Other local guests included Kelly Grimshaw of Goldenwest Communication s, Paul Szabo of Soldier Woman Art Gallery who is on the REDCO board, Lionel Bordeaux, President of Sinte Gleska University, Sherry Neiss of SGU, Trent Poignee and others.

President Bordeaux illustrated the timeline in developing the store. He said, "This started out with input from community members. It needed major funding and REDCO was already creating a corridor here. We contacted Shakopee in March 2006 and they were interested in assistance to the tribe. It took half a year to get to this point."

Bordeaux said that Shakopee provided a $2 million loan and two grants totaling $2 million. RST has $5 million toward the project and on Tuesday the tribal council will consider the loan. Tveidt said that Governor Michael Rounds authorized a total of $300 thousand for the construction of an approach that will allow customers to safely turn in to the business from the highway.

Bordeaux also said, "This is the first step in the process. Other businesses will also be built here. It will keep our money on the reservation. REDCO will be in charge."

After the ceremony all those in attendance were invited to the RST council chambers for a lunch of buffalo stew and wajopi.

Indian Health Services and all tribal health programs and gives tribes access to other federal health programs such as Medicare and Medicaid, according to Elli Wicks, Johnson's tribal liaison in the Rapid City office.

An amendment in the Senate version of the bill addresses an objection South Dakota tribes had to the IHIA act, that urban Indian entities were consulted on an equal basis with tribes, Galbraith said. The new version provides that the federal government will consult tribes and confer with other groups, a distinction that grants more power to the tribes, he said.

The bills vulnerable to veto are those appropriations that exceed amounts Bush laid out in his February budget, Galbraith said.

Funding for law enforcement, including tribal police, stands to be vetoed this year, Galbraith said. Those funds include the Edward Byrne Formula Grant and the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program, which bolster local and state law enforcement agencies' budgets for training, equipment, technology, and crime reduction.

Money has been earmarked for four South Dakota tribes-Oglala Sioux, Cheyenne River, Standing Rock, and Rosebud-to supplement their law enforcement funding through BIA, he said. That funding could be lost if a veto stands.

Johnson said after the meeting that consulting with tribes is "essential to the protection of tribal sovereignty." Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribal President Josh Weston said during the meeting that the BIA fails to adequately consult tribes, and Johnson said in response, "Congress will need to examine policies to ensure that consultation is respected and meaningful, if the BIA cannot do so on their own."

Steele said Johnson thanked the chairmen for their prayers and friendship and said he's back to work now. Monday's meeting marked the first time the senator met with the chairmen since the brain hemorrhage that had kept Johnson out of commission since December 2006, Steele said.

Child and family school made a difference in the negative statistics that have plagued "Indian" students since the beginnings of this new nation.

From the concern and the advice of a parent group, the BOE studied the situation and found that the reason "Indian" students were falling through the floor boards of academia was that, in a basic sense, "Indians" are omitted from society. To counter that, the school placed Native America at the core of its curriculum.

Today, I find myself again holding my breath regarding a new law - the Child and Family Code - enacted by our tribal council on May 2, 2007. It is truly an original, a groundbreaking first, and a landmark tribal legislation. However, after learning what the new code entailed, I cannot help but think that our legislature will realize what it has done and rescind it.

Let me explain. Since 1935, our constitutional form of government negatively affected the majority of Lakota people. This system is alien; it does not come from the people. Consequently, a significant number of Lakota remain reluctant to accept it.

Similar to the public school experience, the new tribal law placed the ancient tiospaye in the forefront.

The public school and this new law have a common bond; both have risen out of the plight of "Indian" children.

As we all know, state agencies have been very active in extinguishing parental rights in child neglect and abuse cases and placing our children in non-Lakota homes. According to the enrollment office, we have children spanning four generations out there.

The idea of bringing this long-standing atrocity to a halt began with concerned Lakota parents and professionals on the Pine Ridge. Development of the new law consumed about seven years, from the initial discussions to the final enactment into law.

In a distinctive sense, Lakota thought, philosophy, and spiritual advice and guidance are central in the structure of the law.

However, the law's intent to end the continuing exodus of children to non-Lakota families is rather conditional on the people.

In other words, tribal members must now make an effort to understand the law. People must relearn the history of their tiospaye; the law requires it. Essentially, this law could also end the unappealing lifestyle we have been living for 72-years.

Knowing one's lineal origins has a reversing and uplifting effect on our current enervative lifestyle. For one, it establishes that distinct Lakota identity. Unfortunately, many do not know what tiospaye they come from.

Not all is lost though as we have a significant number of Lakota people who managed to retain the old way of living. They are now a precious resource.

Some of these people are now actively involved as Tiospaye Interpreters. However, we cannot let these people carry all of our responsibilities. We must now become accountable for our own future. We can no longer rely on the Bureau of Indian Affairs or that mystical someone to come and fix things for us.

As one of the Tiospaye Interpreters, I managed to introduce the new law to school board members, government officials, and the community elder's group in Oglala District. I have seen a mixed reaction from these few people. Most are cautiously receptive to it; a few appeared distressed.

Under the new law, a new tribal child protection services provider, Lakota Oyate Wakanyeja Owicakiyapi is to assume the services of the current Department of Social Services, a state agency. That transition has been in progress since May 2.

Although DSS is still active on the reservation, it is steadily transitioning its services and funding over to LOWO.

LOWO has hired new caseworkers to take on these duties and is currently doing "shadow" work during this transitional period. After January, LOWO will be the primary agency to provide those same services in lieu of the DSS with some major exceptions; LOWO will not take part in terminating parental rights or send children away.

Since May 2, representatives from a variety of tribal agencies have been busy developing new interagency relationships in their effort to comply with the new law: our tribal court system, Public Safety Commission, ONTRAC, First Responders (Ambulance Service), the tribal Enrollment Office, and others I may not have seen yet.

It seems however, due to some miscommunication, public safety and the court have experienced a minor setback.

In addition, all our reservation schools seem to be in need of similar training to help comply with the law. The Oglala Nation Education Consortium recently expressed an interest in learning about the law, particularly, the Tiospaye Interpreters.

I offer here some highlights regarding the interpreters. One key aspect of the law involves Tiospaye Interpreters.

We supposedly have 50-plus traditional tiospaye on the reservation; accordingly, we should have as many Tiospaye Interpreters.

This requires an unprecedented development; the Lakota are now required by tribal law to revive their tiospaye.

Each tiospaye must designate an interpreter whose role is to interpret provisions of the Code between the tiospaye member and the appropriate tribal agencies. LOWO provides the interpreter with training and certification. Then, the Tiospaye Interpreter is to be involved in the resolution process as the official point of contact, a go-between.

The new law specifically requires traditional resolution of all child and family issues. All entities involved in managing the welfare of children within tribal jurisdiction are required to encourage traditional processes to resolve the situation.

This means when a child is found to be in need, it will be resolved locally in accordance with the traditions of the Oyate.

The law also defines some non-traditional processes that will be implemented only in the event that a tiospaye cannot ensure a child's safety. This authority rests with the tribal Attorney General.

This means we can no longer sit around complaining about our problems and pointing fingers; we have to get up and start working to reorganize our tiospaye.

The law clearly specifies the purpose of the Tiospaye Interpreters, as well as their functions.

They are directly involved in the investigation and referral processes of reported child neglect/abuse responsibilities of all tribal entities.

They are integral of the required collaborative effort to develop and implement these new procedures.

For a Tiospaye Interpreter to be effective in this role, he or she must be culturally competent.

We must understand that although this development is unexpected, the tiospaye has always had a major role in defending the child. In other words, it is nothing new. We just have to pick up the pieces scattered about by the newcomer to our land.

Oregon school officials pan proposal to ban Indian mascots

SALEM, Ore. (AP) _ A state panel heard strongly negative reviews Tuesday from local school officials about a proposal to ban Indian high school mascots from about 15 Oregon schools.

Some Indian leaders consider the use of Indian mascots, logos and team nicknames as offensive. So state school officials are considering a recommendation to force schools to get rid of them by September 2011.

During several hours of testimony, however, officials from those schools argued that there's no evidence that use of such mascots or symbols creates any problem and that it would be costly from districts to have to remove them.

``We have no data to show that this causes harm,'' said Lee Paterson, superintendent for the Roseburg School District, where high school teams are called ``the Indians.''

In fact, Paterson and other officials said the Indian students at those schools take a sense of pride in having their schools known by such symbols and that the community as a whole supports them as well.

The question was raised in Oregon last December, when then-high school senior Che Butler, a member of the Confederated Tribes of the Siletz, urged the Oregon State Board of Education to strike down the mascots as racist.

After Tuesday's hearing, Butler said that despite the school officials' assertions that the use of Indian mascots hasn't caused problems, he and other Indians feel demeaned and insulted by their use.

The proposal to do away the Indian mascots and nicknames came after months of closed hearings by an advisory panel to state School Superintendent Susan Castillo, who hasn't indicated when she plans to issue a decision in the dispute.

White Face accepts Austrian award

By Anna Bee
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Charmane White Face flew to Salzburg, Austria on Monday, Oct. 15, to accept the Nuclear Free Future Award for Resistance. White Face is a coordinator for the Defenders of the Black Hills, a South Dakota non profit organization that works to keep the Black Hills environmentally protected and to help remind people of the original tenants of 1868 Treaty.

The NFFA recognized White Face for her particular concern, organization and activity especially regarding the protest work to prevent further uranium mining in the upper Midwest region and to clean up all of the abandoned mines and wells.

White Face said, " There are thousands of locations, thousands of abandoned uranium mines and wells. The wind carries the radioactive dust from these abandoned mines all over the region."

White Face adds, "When we breath that radio active dust in, then we are very prone to cancer and in So. Dakota; cancer is the second largest cause of death."

White Face has a double major bachelors degree in biology and physical science awarded from Black Hills State University. White Face also says, "the abandoned wells, greater than 7000 in number, go down to 800 feet and were never capped or marked.

Charmain White Face was awarded teh Nuclear Free Future Award for Resistance on Oct. 15.

This leads to cross contamination of under-ground water through adulteration with uranium or other radio active particles."

White Face said that the Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association had passed a resolution declaring all the reservations in North Dakota, South Dakota and Nebraska to be nuclear free areas. White Face previously gave the GPTCA several presentations and they voted to make the area nuclear free. Says White Face, "This gives ammunition to the tribal attorneys to stop any more nuclear pollution from entering our reservations."

There are three awards being given by the Mott Foundation and the country of Austria: Dr. Martin from Germany is recognized with a $10,000 award for his participation in education about nuclear problems, The Mayors Committee from Japan is being given a $10,000 award for special recognition in the area of nuclear peace and White Face is being awarded $10,000 in the area of resistance against nuclear activity.

White Face said, "I am going to give my award to the Defenders of the Black Hills so they may continue our work, especially here in South Dakota."

Finding My Voice

By Dana Lonehill

You can count on your family for a good laugh

Dana Badmilk

I realized when I have writer's block, all I have to do is look to my family for a story. (I can just see cousins cringing right now, but this is my immediate family, calm down.) I don't even have to go back in the memory bank too far, it was less than a year ago.

About a day or two after my step dad died, I was at my mom's helping her cook and clean since people were stopping by and she wasn't in the mood. I hadn't much sleep, as did anyone else.

We were basically like walking zombies.

So my mom wanted me to make something with biscuits. You know the instant biscuits, that come in the paper can. Well, I have a fear of anything that pops, balloons, guns, 4th of July and so on. And those biscuits cans make a loud noise when you open them.

Anyway, I asked my sister Jaida to open the can, she starts slowly to pull the paper. I plug my ears, yet can't take my eyes off the soon to be explosion. Jaida then hands it off to Jenna, now mind you Jaida is an Amazon and was then 18. Jenna is an Amazon in the making and at the time 13. Jenna throws it to Jonna and says, "You wanted biscuits, now open it!" Jonna grabs the paper and pulls. Nothing happens, no pop.

So while us three older sisters are scrambling around telling our baby 11-year old sister to use a spoon, Jenna runs and grabs a spoon. Jaida and I have our ears plugged at this time and Jenna runs out of the room.

Jonna finally notices we are watching and waiting for something as she digs in the crack of the can with the spoon, she must have let a little air in.

She looks at us with her huge Liz Taylor eyes and says "What's going on?"

It was then Jaida and I notice the can getting bigger by the second and Jaida screams "JONNA!!! NOOO!" Jonna throws the can to our brother Jesse, who was 21 and just happened to be walking by.

He is totally caught off guard as the rest of us watch the can grow with our ears plugged. "Huh?" he proclaims as he watches us and walks like a toy soldier with his legs straight and the ticking time bomb held out from hisbody.

pop

It explodes in his hand and he slowly marches in a circle and falls over.

All us girls laugh so hard at him. It was as if it was a grenade and all because of the fear of a pop, that really wasn't that loud.

He gets up and hands me the can and dusts himself off.

Later when I recount every detail of our drama to our mom, she just says "What the heck did I get all you drama queens from, anyway?"

We all know we got it from her, but on that day, I think we needed that laughter.

You can always count on your family for a good laugh, the bad thing about this story is I was 34 at the time.

Our Views

Looking back over three years

The times are tough economically and socially for the communities which we serve. Lakota enterprises kind of mirrors the struggle which all of us are experiencing with the influences that we see from within our borders and beyond. The Lakota Country Times has obediently jumped through all of the hoops that are required in order to fulfill the designation as an official Legal paper by the powers that be.

We have published 52 issues consistently in each of the last three years, we are fully licensed to do business on the Rosebud and Pine Ridge reservations and we have a U.S. Postal Permit designating we are "legal" with the United States government and allows us to do our "legal" mailing, and on October 18, 2007 we personally delivered our Statement of Legal Newspaper Ownership to Chris Nelson, South Dakota Secretary of State, so South Dakota will consider us a "legal" newspaper. The only people we have to pursuade now is the SDNA and they won't listen to us until March of next year.

Despite the apparent roadblocks which we have faced over the course of publishing for three years, we have persevered and will continue to deliver a professional product to Lakota people, they expect it, they deserve it.

We, in a sense, are a community newspaper for Pine Ridge, Rosebud and surrounding areas. We have a fair amount of support from businesses and local schools that support our effort to give readers of all ages a fair and balanced perspective of news which is timely and relevant to Lakota people. We like to say that our newspaper integrates a sense of "Lakota spirit" and we deliver!

In these last three years, we have had our struggles learning to be successful entrepreneurs and we have had our positive impacts. But mostly, we have had barriers that we overcame and will continue to do so.

There have been times we have conflicted with ignorant thinking people who still have that red neck mentality of where they think Indian people should be.

The newspaper business is about giving people information which will impact their lives in concrete terms.

It is about providing Lakota people with information which will keep them informed about community events, assist them in being better readers and respectful and mindful of the daily struggles which we all share. It's about literacy! Literacy strengthens our families and we can use more strength in these trying times. It's about being a truly good communication tool to link information to our communities that will help them in their daily lives.

We appreciate the work of our competitors also, for as everyone knows competition makes all of us better. Lakota people are very sophisticated in the news that they expect from a paper that delivers stories, official minutes of school board proceedings, color enhancement and unique graphic design and layout, and family literacy projects.

We appreciate our readers both locally and via the world-wide web which approaches some 20,000 "hits" each month, including 33 countries and territories, many of those originating from foreign readers who appreciate the uniqueness of a Lakota worldview.

Most of all, we appreciate the work of all of the dedicated "Times" staff as we, together, conscientiously strive to meet our deadline each week. Editor, Amanda Takes War Bonnett and business manager Connie Smith-Blanco, two Oglala Lakota women, are owners and entrepreneurs who are now seasoned veterans in the business arena. Manuel Blanco works in graphic design and circulation and is equally as dedicated to seeing the paper succeed.

The professional and creative work that our correspondents and photographers support us with each week is at the heart of what we do and which defines us as a unique and relevant publication. We strive to report news which is culturally sensitive to Lakota people and is never objectionable.

We appreciate the people at the Rapid City Journal printing plant, they do a terrific job of printing the paper, to the people in their mailing room who make sure our paper gets to the post office boxes in a timely manner and to the guys in the two distribution companies who make sure our paper is delivered to hundreds of vendors on time.

We really appreciate Anne Hunter of Kyle and her creative skill in developing our webpage. We also express our appreciation to Jason Walters who re-designed our company logo. And to the Lakota Women for Change who voiced their support for the Lakota Country Times, on the Rosebud reservation and for their endorsement we will be forever grateful.

Gifts we cannot transcend

I was fortunate to visit the Colville Confederaed reservation in Washington State. The 12 Confederated tribes still own 1.3 million acres of land. If the mountains and Columbia River could recount the captivating stories, the history of the Tribes now known as the Colville Confederated Tribes what would they tell us. I wish I could have witnessed net fishing as I traveled along the Columbia River. This is the same river that Lewis and Clark traversed on their journey to the Pacific and where they bought salmon from the local tribes. I saw tall and beautiful lodge pole pines as I traveled over mountain passes and wished that I could bring some home.

The Colville Confederated Tribes experienced the loss of their homes and land like many other river tribes when the government built the Grand Coulee Dam on their reservation. Well-rehearsed government justifications for flooding their tribal homeland separated them from their fertile river bottom and their secure cultural seasonal fishing that had been their livelihood for centuries. It is said that at one time, salmon were so numerous on the Columbia that the fish seemed to jump into the hand held nets of men who stood over the river on fishing planks. In my mind's eye, I could almost imagine what it was like, children happily playing while the women busily cleaned and dried salmon and prepared for

Thoughts that come from the heart

Watching the big leagues

On Sunday, there were probably a whole lot of Navajos glued to their television sets as the Boston Red Sox and the Cleveland Indians battled the last game of the American League championship baseball series at Fenway Park in Boston to see which team will go on to the World Series against the Colorado Rockies. The Boston Red Sox won.

I know I was glued to the TV and I rarely get excited by sports, except for high school basketball and occasionally football.

But on Sunday, I couldn't break away from the television, except for commercials. Why this game? Jacoby Ellsbury was playing. He is a 24-year old Navajo who followed his dream to play in the major league and was drafted by the Boston Red Sox. His sign-on contract was $1.4 million. He is a good outfielder and is very athletic. Good enough to make it to the major league and will now play in the World Series. He will play in Game One in the first game of the series on Wednesday evening. The Red Sox are known to be one of the last major league teams to integrate until 2003.

Ellsbury, who played center field during Oregon State's run to the 2005 College World Series, will play the same spot for the Red Sox in this year's 2007 World Series.

Ellsbury made it big with determination and with his quickness. He loves baseball. He is also very handsome.

He is a member of the Colorado River Indians Tribe and grew up in Oregon. He has three brothers and his mother Majorie McCabe Ellsbury is a full blood Navajo who is fluent in her language. Marjorie works as a special education teacher. His father is non-Indian and lives near Warm Springs, Ore.

According to Jacoby's aunt, the family can trace its roots back to Ganado Mucho. Mucho was a prominent Navajo during the 19th century - a cattleman and a peacemaker.

The mainstream media couldn't quite get ir right, placing Jacoby in several tribes and one news article listed his mother as a rug weaver and his father as a sliversmith. Which is basic stereotyping for Navajo people. His mother found that amusing.

He's Native American and he is in the big leagues and that is what made it fun to watch the Red Sox beat the Cleveland Indians. And being the silent activist I am, I find the Cleveland Indians mascot disdainful. It's an ugly caricature of a Native American brave, Chief Wahoo. The whole mascot issue is a different matter though and I don't want to taint this painting of two great role models.

Ellsbury isn't the first Native American to hit the big leagues, Joba Chamberlain, Winnebago, grew up in Lincoln, raised by his father Harlan, now pitches for the New York Yankees.

So two of the finest Native American baseball prospects have arrived on the national scene within the same time frame with dazzling skills, energy and determination they will display in the big leagues.

Both are good role models to Native American youth, to prove that they can make it to the big leagues too, whether it is basketball, baseball or football.

The World Series is going to be exciting to watch this year.

the approaching winter months. Like all other things in life I imagine they had hardships yet it was their unique way of life.

I visited Chief Joseph's grave not far the Colville tribal offices. I had an incredible sad feeling yet I thought what would this indigenous world be like without the memory of Chief Joseph? I saw gifts left on his tombstone, track ribbons and medals left by young athletes, a medal left by a Vietnam veteran, beautiful rocks, and other treasures for a Chief who will never be forgotten for the sacrifices he made for his people. A Chief who contributed in part to the realization and faith in who I am. Who as a prisoner of war was not allowed to return to his home even after death, but again maybe this was his wish to be buried among his relatives who were in captivity with him.

We can lament the great losses our people experienced, despite it all we know that as Native people we will survive. Yes, modern ways may have appeal and have a place in our world but this tribe has yet to be separated from their deeply embedded traditional family ways. Families still gather to harvest huckleberries, camas and other gifts of nature. I experienced for the first time the wonderful huckleberry bread yet a restaurant that offered fresh salmon could not be found.

This trip was memorable. I am grateful to nature for the wonders of awe-inspiring scenery. A landscape that alternates from desert to wheat fields, sky colored waters, and the natural beauty of the plant nation. I am thankful for the blessings and whisperings of Unci Maka, the mountains, massive cliffs, ravines, and valleys. I do not feel small in this scheme of nature, but grateful to be part of it all - to see the crimson colors of the ceremony of fall once again. There is energy, a liberating power in the splendor of creation. I am inspired to write when I am in the midst of such beauty. We can look through troubled eyes or choose to see the magnificence that surrounds us and receive the promises of inspiration and hope; gifts we cannot transcend.

Words of the 7th Generation
By Anson Black Calf

A call for Indigenous unity

Wanblii Ake Glii

This column was given this title to serve as a voice for the seventh generation but the topics and opinions covered cannot and should not be the voice of just one person or one nation. It should be the voice of many other individuals and many other Indigenous nations that have a desire to be heard and contribute to the returning well-being of our collective people's futures as Indigenous people.

The seventh generation prophecy foreseen by our ancestors is shared by many other Indigenous nations in similar prophecies. They are about those who would bring their people from the confusion and imbalance of today's world back to the traditions that gave our ancestors balance, harmony and good spiritual lives. The seventh generation prophecy is about healing, growth and rebirth of the sacred hoop of life.

The lands of this continent are vast in all directions and there are many Indigenous peoples each unique with their own traditions and history. We Indigenous are related and we have tens of thousands of years living here together, longer than any man or woman of science can tell us. Our ancestors have all suffered and many are still struggling to survive and fight for the right to live as they want to, while some have forgotten who their ancestors once were. In order to fulfill the many Indigenous prophecies that encompass healing, growth and rebirth, our Indigenous people must be freed from the mental prisons and illusions of today's world. Knowledge and understanding must first be achieved in our collective peoples as a whole. And this is done through word of thought either written or spoken.

There are many Indigenous organizations that work very hard to contribute to the revival of our people and this column is also here to serve as a means to bring about awareness, encourage communication among the people, and liberate us of the sickness and ignorance that still plagues some of our relatives today.

That said, all Indigenous people young and elderly are invited to write or email to express matters of concern or share any stories of importance for the people. Those who would like to volunteer to contribute their words will be sited in the "Words of the Seventh Generation" column.

To submit your writing or for any questions you may have, email Anson Black Calf at wanblii@hotmail.com or you can write to me at P.O. Box 386, Martin, SD 57551.

Notes From Indian Country
By Tim Giago

Sharing a Cuban cigar with Vernon Bellecourt

(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

My receptionist, Christy Tibbitts, stuck her head in the door of my office at the Lakota Journal weekly newspaper several years ago and said, "There's a Vernon Bellecourt on the line."

Whoa! Vernon Bellecourt? Bellecourt was one of the spokesmen and founders of the American Indian Movement, and as the editor and publisher of the Lakota Times; I had my share of confrontations with AIM. I had accused them of shooting out the windows of my newspaper building and of attacking it with firebombs just before Christmas in 1981.

With just a little bit of trepidation I answered the phone. "Hey Tim, this is Vernon Bellecourt. I know you're probably surprised, but I just read one of your articles in the St. Paul Pioneer Press about your anger at using Indians as mascots. I just wanted to tell you that you are right on and I would like to meet with you about this," he said.

In 1992, the week the Washington professional football team met the Buffalo Bills in the Super Bowl in Minneapolis, an article by me about the use of Indians as mascots appeared in Newsweek Magazine. Some enterprising editor put the headline on it that read, "I hope the Redskins lose."

Nowhere in the article did I say, "I hope the Redskins lose," and that brought the wrath of every Redskin fan in the country down on my head. I traveled to Minneapolis that week to cover the protest and had my first meeting with Vernon Bellecourt.

We had a cup of coffee a day or two before the Super Bowl and he told me that there would be a protest by several hundred Indians at the stadium.

We kicked around ideas for future articles and then I had to fly back to South Dakota because I was on a deadline.

Bellecourt impressed me in that he was willing to reach across the table and shake hands with me even though many of his cohorts looked at me as a political enemy.

I had no qualms about shaking his hand because I was there as a newspaperman and not as a politician.

The last time I saw Vernon was at a restaurant in New York City. I had dinner with him and another well-known mascot protestor, Charlene Teters.

The restaurant was on the top floor of a building that rotated so that we could see different parts of the New York skyline. After dinner Bellecourt reached into his pocket and pulled out two cigars. He said, "I got these directly from Fidel Castro when I was visiting Cuba last month." I must admit that it was one of the best cigars I had ever smoked.

From the day of our first phone visit Bellecourt kept me abreast of the different protests around the country that his organization, The National Coalition on Racism in Sports & Media, would be conducting. The previous year I had covered the protest at the University of Illinois and Michael Haney, Charlene Teters, and Vernon were there. Haney, an Oklahoma Seminole Indian, passed away a few years ago.

I was on my way from Albuquerque to Rapid City, SD last week when Teters called me on my cell phone to inform me that Vernon was critically ill. By the time I got to Rapid City he had died. His funeral was held on his home reservation of White Earth in Minnesota last week.

Bellecourt's death brought up a lot of the things that had been a part of the history of the American Indian Movement. There was talk of his involvement in the death of Anna Mae Pictou Aquash in the 1970s and of other things that happened in the heydays of AIM. There is no proof of this allegation.

When told about the death of Bellecourt, former AIM leader Russell Means said he was sad to hear about his death because, "I wanted him to live long enough to go to jail for Anna Mae's death." Well, all of this should come out at the trial of John "Boy" Graham that should take place in Rapid City in 2008. Arvol Looking Cloud who was convicted in her death and is now serving a life sentence accused Graham of being the triggerman. Perhaps the truth will finally be known.

There were a lot of bad things that happened in the 1970s in the angry early days of AIM. I am sure that many of AIM's leaders wish that they had done some things differently, but in the long run, they were fighting for the trampled rights of the Indian people and the route they chose was confrontational and often ended up violently.

Before asking me to work with him on the mascot issue Bellecourt shook my hand again and said, "Tim, I know that you and me didn't always see eye-to-eye, but if you really look at it, we were fighting for the same things, but we were probably coming at it from different directions."

There is a Lakota tradition that says one should never speak ill of the dead. And I know there will be accusatory words flying around that would disparage Vernon Bellecourt, but I only knew him as a friend and in my prayers I hope that his travels to the Spirit World be filled with wonders.

Children deserve better than the SCHIP veto

Congress failed to override the veto of President Bush on Oct. 18. How can he and John Thune take the stand that they did? Not enough money for the expansion of SCHIP but no problem with money for the war in Iraq and for new cells in prisons and jails?

In Wednesday's paper a Just Had to Ask column by Erik D. Olsen hit the nail on the head. He said:

"Americans are tired of the politics of division and partisanship. When broad segments of the nation - and Congress - can come together in agreement, we should not miss the opportunity to act…. Choosing children's health care - access to pediatricians, affordable trips to the dentist, resources to combat childhood obesity, so much more - is doing the right thing, period."

He was absolutely right but Bush and Thune don't agree. We can fund the war in Iraq at an outrageous cost, killing children there, but we can't expand the SCHIP program? Children in America deserve better than that.

That same day's paper made fun of Al Gore winning the Nobel Peace Prize. Their political cartoon was anything but humorous to this writer and everyone with whom it was discussed. So Irene Sendler at 96 deserves the prize for saving more than 2500 Children in 1942 from Nazis more than Al Gore because he was just trying to protect Polar Bears, for heavens sake.

People just don't get the fact that unless we take action immediately we will not have a planet to protect, will run out of clean water and all of the other necessities of life. But Cal Thomas in his column entitled "Global Warming a chance for conservatives" said he believes that global warming is a secular religion and "Al Gore deserved the Nobel Peace prize as much as Yasser Afafat, LeDuc Tho and a myriad of other low wattage lights, which is to say not at all."

He said the Church of Global Warming is a cult. Gore has, instead of the Trinity an Oscar, an Emmy and a Nobel Peace Prize. Come on now Cal, how bright is your light?

In Thursday's Rapid City paper the column of Jim Kent was puzzling. He titled it "On mascots, sneakers and ignorance. He said:

"Oh, yeah - there's those Native Americans, but, hey man, these people do nothing but whine anyway. Right? I mean AS IF it wasn't enough that every single tribe in the country is making a mint off us poor white folk with several casinos on every reservation (while still collecting all that welfare money from our hard-earned tax dollars). Now they want to have their own shoes. I mean they want to have their own shoes. Humpf. Hey if anyone is going to decide what's good for these people, what "honors" them, its going to be us white folks. Right?

Imagine, saying they've got their own physical needs and alienating us in the process. Locking us out. Who do they think they are? Last time I saw something this ridiculous, it was when I was turned away from that sickle-cell anemia clinic. Me … a white man. Go figure."

Please turn to SCHIP Veto page A6

Ignorance? Yes. Was Kent attempting to be humorous? I saw no humor in it. Every single tribe is not making a mint off poor white folk and they certainly are not collecting welfare money from his hard earned tax dollars. They do have their own physical needs that are very great. Come on now Mr. Kent please add "Josh, just joking." Then write what you really meant in your next column.

Thomas Sowell's column in Thursday's paper was quite irritating. Come on now Mr. Sowell do a little research. Crime Statistics do not provide evidence that the left is wrong. He never mentioned the word demographics in his entire column. Have the demographics changed, most definitely!

Sowell says,

"It was precisely the rise to power in the 1960s (in the courts as well as in politics) of those who believed that 'injustices and inequities' were the cause of crime which marked a de-emphasis on law enforcement and imprisonment - and marked one of the most dramatic increases in crime in our history."

Injustice and inequities are the cause of crime but there has not been a de-emphasis on law enforcement and imprisonment. Lock 'em up and throw away the key has become the rule of law. Where have you been Mr. Sowell? He says that finally higher rates of imprisonment produced lower rates of crime. Again where have you been? It was not the higher rates of imprisonment but the demographics. Fewer people are at the age to commit crimes than in the past.

According to the sentencing project, we are locking up more and more offenders in federal and state prison for drugs, not for violent crimes. Nearly 6 of 10 persons in state prison for a drug offense have no history of violence or high-level drug selling activity.

African Americans serve almost as much time in federal prison for a drug offense as whites do for a violent offense largely due to racially disparate sentencing laws such as the 100-to1 crack-powder cocaine disparity. South Dakota has the highest rate of imprisonment of blacks as noted in a prior column.

We must support The Second Chance Act of 2007, S. 1060. The bill has been trying to pass Congress since at least 2004. It was reintroduced to the house in March as H-1593. That act will help ease the reentry process for people leaving prison by providing increased funding for prisoner mentoring programs, substance abuse treatment and job training. It was favorably reported out of the Senate Judiciary on August 2.

Persons in prison with a history of regular drug use are less than half as likely to be receiving treatment as in 1991. We would rather execute adults than provide treatment of addicts or education of children.

The United States Supreme Court halted the execution of Christopher Scott Emmett and legal experts have said that move might signal a nationwide halt to lethal injection until the justices decide next year whether the procedure amounts to cruel and unusual punishment.

Sandra Red Feather's design selected for AIHEC conference

Sandra Red Feather, Pine Ridge designed the image that will represent the 27th annual meeting of the American Indian Higher Education Consortium.

BISMARCK, N.D. - The computer-designed artwork of a student at United Tribes Technical College will be the image that represents the annual meeting of students attending the nation's tribal colleges and universities.

A design by Sandra Red Feather, of Pine Ridge and a graduate of Red Cloud Indian High School was selected by the American Indian Higher Education Consortium for its 27th annual student conference next year. Red Feather is the daughter of Mary Weasel Bear of Pine Ridge.

Red Feather, an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, is a second year student in the United Tribes Art-Art Marketing Program.

"It feels great," said Red Feather about having her design selected. "I had never won an art contest before."

Art-Art Marketing Instructor Wayne Pruse encouraged Red Feather to enter the contest.

She did her research by going onto the internet and visiting the websites of schools around the country that attend the annual event.

The 2008 AIHEC Student Conference is scheduled for March 17 - 20 in Bismarck. It brings together students, faculty and administrators from 35 member institutions, located primarily in the western part of the nation, that serve the higher education needs of American Indian students.

Red Feather designed the logo over the course of three weeks entirely in the computer using the program Adobe Illustrator.

She received ideas and suggestions from other students and technical help and guidance from her instructor Colleen Bredahl.

The design contains images of creatures in the natural world that Red Feather selected because they are common to regions of the country where AIHEC schools are located.

As a background she chose the colors of the Medicine Wheel.

With her newfound success, Red Feather says she's thinking about entering other work in the graphic design categories of the AIHEC student competition.

The competition, which is entirely friendly and cooperative, includes categories for a wide range of student accomplishments.

In the arts alone, students may enter works in subdivisions for textiles, ceramics, pottery, jewelry, sculpture, beadwork, leather work, and quillwork, just to name a few.

Other major divisions of the AIHEC competition include critical inquiry, business, traditional plants, speech, web pages, science, writing, and the always popular knowledge bowl.

Red Feather's logo design also contains the phrase: "Coming Together as One," the theme of the event.

Judge considering whether to unseal documents in nickname case

GRAND FORKS, N.D. (AP) - Sealing documents to aid in a settlement is not enough reason to override the public right to view them, an attorney for Forum Communications Co., told a judge Monday.

Judge Lawrence Jahnke is considering a motion to unseal documents in the University of North Dakota's lawsuit against the NCAA over the Fighting Sioux nickname. After hearing arguments from Forum attorney Mike Andrews, Jahnke said he might rule later in the day.

UND is challenging an NCAA ban on the use of the nickname and logo in post-season play, and on being a playoff host. The case is set for trial in December.

Jahnke postponed a pretrial conference for the case until Nov. 5. Representatives from the NCAA and Attorney General Wayne Stenehjem's office did not appear in court Monday.

UND has filed a motion asking Jahnke to rule from the bench in its a favor. The NCAA has filed a motion seeking to expand the case to include UND's relationship with Sioux tribes.

Todd County knocks Little Wound out of Playoffs, at Winner for 2nd round

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

MISSION - With just 11 seconds off the clock, Todd County's CJ Spotted Tail set the tone for the first round 11A football playoffs by hitting Noah Kilonzo on a 67 yard touchdown pass, the point after failed but the Falcons were up 6-0 very quickly. After Ocean Lehauli covered a Little Wound fumble deep in Little Wound territory, Spotted Tail hit Lawyer Claymore on a nine yard TD pass to give Todd County a 12-0 lead on the way to a 36-16 first round play off victory Tuesday night in Mission.

This was a reversal of last year's first round playoff as Todd County traveled to Kyle to take on the Mustangs, a game won by Little Wound that sent them on to the second round and a date with Winner, not this year though. Todd County downed Little Wound earlier in the season 36-0 and even though the Falcons have been struggling with injuries and ineligible players, they stepped up for the first round of the playoffs. Spotted Tail hit his third TD pass, a 65 yarder to Jaden Allen to give the Falcons an 18-0 lead. Spotted Tail added a touchdown on the ground and Gunner Krogman finished off the first half with a 17 yard scamper around the left end for a touchdown to give Todd County a 30-0 halftime lead.

Above: After throwing three touchdown passes, CJ SpottedTail runs the fourth one in on a two yard run though Enoch Yellow Hawk while Brice Hornbeck and Tyler One Horn look on.

Right: Todd County's Mike Neiss crashed the goal line from two yards out for a final score as the Falcons knocked the Mustangs out 36 to 16 Wednesday.

Krogman was on a collision course to take out Andrew Schmaltz's school rushing record of 3,150 yards when he ended up with a high ankle sprain in the St. Francis game. Krogman played sparingly against Cheyenne Eagle Butte and Bennett County and didn't suit up against Red Cloud. Early in the fourth quarter, the all around athlete wove his way through the line and loped to a 26 yard gain and a new school rushing record of 3,175 yards. Todd County called timeout, presented Gunner with the game ball and took a couple of photos.

Trin In The Woods, Little Wound's junior quarterback, threw four interceptions in the first half but kept throwing until he connected with Brice Hornbeck on a 37 yard TD pass midway through the third, In The Woods ran it over for two and the lead was 30-8 for the Falcons. The Falcons marched right down the field and answered with a Mike Neiss two yard run to make it 36-8. Little Wound closed out the scoring with an In the Woods 11 yard pass to Jacey Mesteh, Trin ran it over for two again and it was 36-16.

In the Woods finished with 11 completions out of 24 attempts for 205 yards with five interceptions and two touchdowns; Kevin Hunter was the top runner for the Mustangs with 17 carries for 34 yards while Hornbeck had five catches for 120 yards and a TD. For the Falcons, Spotted Tail was 12 of 18 for 195 yards and three touchdowns as Jaden Allen caught five for 104 yards and a TD while Krogman carried the ball ten times for 82 yards and a touchdown. Canku One Star finished up with two interceptions and six tackles.

Little Wound finishes out their season with a 4-5 record while Todd County now is 6-3 and headed to Winner Monday night.

American Horse School receives accreditation

ALLEN - American Horse School has earned accreditation for the 2006-07 school year from the North Central Association Commission on Accreditation and School Improvement, said Gloria J. Coats-Kitsopoulos, Principal of American Horse School.

The Association recognized the school on April 3 at it's annual awards luncheon held in Chicago. Albert Sharp, president of American Horse School Board and Coats-Kitsopoulos were recognized in Chicago and received the accreditation certificate and plaque that is on display at the school.

To earn accreditation, schools must meet NCA CASI's high standards, be evaluated by a team of professionals from outside the school, and implement a continuous school improvement plan focused on increasing student performance. The accreditation process is voluntary and requires annual review.

"Accreditation demonstrates to our students, parents, and community that we are focused on raising student achievement, providing a safe and enriching learning environment, and maintaining an efficient and effective operation staffed by highly qualified educators," said Principal Coats-Kitsopoulos. "NCA CASI accreditation is recognized across state lines, which not only eases the transfer process as students move from accredited school to accredited school but also assures parents that the school is meeting regionally and nationally accepted standards for quality and successful professional practice."

Sharp heads the school's improvement agenda as school board president said, "The real value of NCA CASI accreditation is the focus on improvement. The accreditation process focuses the school staff on analyzing student performance data, identifying areas of weakness, and developing clear goals and plans for improvement. We regularly assess and measure our progress in all goal areas, and NCA CASI holds us accountable for demonstrating growth. The process keeps everyone at American Horse School focused on raising student achievement."

Dr. Angie Kippang, Associate Professor, School of Education at the University of South Dakota is also the State Director for North Dakota and South Dakota for NCA CASI. Dr. Koppang will visit American Horse School in December to continue with the on-going evaluation of AHS's school improvement process for the current school year. Parents and interested community members can learn more about NCA CASI accreditation at www.ncacasi.org.

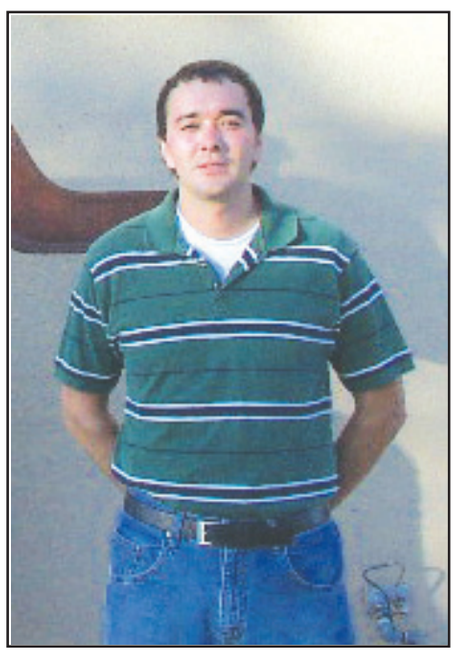
The groups located on the Pine Ridge Reservation were identified as they fundraise for graduations and end of the year field trips. Rendon in training with the Rapid City Fire Department

By Archie B. Beauvais and Beaux Beauvais
Special to the Times

RAPID CITY - Robert Rendon, 32, is in an eight week training program as a firefighter in training with the Rapid City Fire Department. He signed on after undergoing an interview and a written test and receives a salary while in training.



The Oglala Sioux firefighter came to the fire department apparently well-qualified for such grueling work. He has had seven years experience as a wildland firefighter in Pine Ridge with the Bureau of Indian Affairs. He also worked in emergency medical services in Pine Ridge as a paramedic for four years.

Rendon grew up in Colorado and has been living in South Dakota for several years and stays connected to the Lakota community through family in Pine Ridge. His sister, Aspen, recently completed her degree from Oglala Lakota College and his mother, Norma, is employed at Cangleska, Inc.

The RCFD has an extensive website offering a history of the department when it became a paid department in 1949. The duties and qualifications that must be met in order to be a fire fighter in training and paramedic are also very helpful. Prospective employees must pass a drug test, medical examination, psychological examination and a background investigation.

One must also sign a tobacco non-use statement attesting to the fact that they will not use tobacco for the duration of their careers.

The eight week program includes training in structural and wildland firefighting along with other specialized areas such as hazardous materials and aircraft firefighting. The new firefighters are not yet able to respond to actual emergency calls, however, the last two weeks of the program include "ride time" while riding along with either a fire engine or an ambulance. The RCFD responds to over 11,000 calls each year and has prevention and education and training components on its website as well as a description of its operations department.

Robert Rendon is now in training with the Rapid City Fire Department.

The training day is 8 to 4 p.m. when the new firefighters are engaged in the classroom and 4 to 5 p.m. is aside for physical training.

The firefighter's normal schedule is 24 hours on and 48 hours off. The firefighters in training progress through different levels of qualification; Fire Medic Recruit, Fire Medic 1, and Fire Medic 2.

The city has seven fire stations, six within the city and one at the airport and 37 fire department vehicles. All fire engines in Rapid City carry paramedic equipment like ambulances do as many firefighters are trained as paramedics. Rendon said that there are approximately 134 fire department employees throughout the city. He notes that additional training will be available to him later as he progresses beyond the training and probationary stages.

Station One of the Rapid City Fire Department located across from the post office is the work site for Rendon and that, in and of itself, has to generate some anxiety as the battalion chief is stationed at the same location.

Rendon's combination of experience, college hours at OLC and a community college in Colorado have prepared him for a career in the Rapid City Fire Department and he appears determined to meet the challenge. At a time when the nation's "Bravest" are being hailed as heroes, firefighting is a noble profession that pays well the longer one remains in the profession.

Domestic violence awareness events coordinated

MARTIN - Cangleska, Inc. held its annual walk in Martin Wednesday, Oct. 17 as part of the events in observance of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

Cangleska, Inc. Cultural Teacher Chris Eagle Hawk talks about a time when women and children had real freedom and independence without feeling the fear of domestic violence. He told the group men must be held accountable for violent actions which were never part of the Lakota culture until colonization.

Martin Police Officer Holly Strand, who talked about her mother as a survivor of domestic violence, said the repsonse of police departments across the nation have changed. She said officers are often apprehensive about such calls because they never know what to expect from the offenders.

In Rapid City, on Friday, Oct. 19, a Diva Day was held for women at the Mother Butler Center. The event was from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. and featured free booths for make overs, hair styling, acupuncture, massages, manicures and a tasty lunch. Door prizes were given out throughout the day.

Social Security announces 2.3 percent benefit increase for 2008

BALTIMORE, MD. - Monthly Social Security and Supplemental Security Income benefits for more than 54 million Americans will increase 2.3 percent in 2008, the Social Security Administration announced today.

Social Security and Supplemental Security Income benefits increase automatically each year based on the rise in the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers (CPI-W), from the third quarter of the prior year to the corresponding period of the current year. This year's increase in the CPI-W was 2.3 percent.

The 2.3 percent Cost-of-Living Adjustment will begin with benefits that nearly 50 million Social Security beneficiaries receive in January 2008. Increased payments to more than 7 million Supplemental Security Income beneficiaries will begin on December 31.

Some other changes that take effect in January of each year are based on the increase in average wages. Based on that increase, the maximum amount of earnings subject to the Social Security tax (taxable maximum) will increase to $102,000 from $97,500. Of the estimated 164 million workers who will pay Social Security taxes in 2008, nearly 12 million will pay higher taxes as a result of the increase in the taxable maximum.

Information about Medicare changes for 2008 can be found at www.cms.hhs.gov.

Day care provider pleads guilty to death of 3 year old

PIERRE - Amanda Marisa Little Elk, 23, pleaded guilty to involuntary manslaughter in June in federal court for causing the death of Trevor Little Wounded in December of 2005.

Little Elk was a Dupree day care provider and has been sentenced last week to 13 months in prison after a 3-month-old boy in her care died of hyperthermia.

When the boy's mother dropped him off, he was in a car seat, wrapped in two blankets and a quilt. Little Elk didn't know the boy was so bundled when she left him alone for hours.

The boy was soaked in sweat when she checked on him, and he was inactive for the rest of the day. She said nothing when his father picked him up.

The boy died of organ failure the next day after Sanford USD Medical Center recorded a body temperature of 104.

Little Elk, also known as Amanda Cook, admitted gross negligence.

In addition to prison time, she was ordered to pay $9,400 restitution to the boy's parents, the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, social services in Eagle Butte and crime victims' programs.

Ask Anna

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I've always enjoyed looking at your columns and a close friend has given me your number but I've never called.

I have a situation that I know what you will probably say and what I need to do, but just somehow I just haven't.

I've been in a relationship for almost 20 years and have several children from this person. I have been through hell and back in this relationship (emotional and physical abuse, cheating, lying, - you name it). I've gotten out several times- I have a very good income and have always been independent, but I always took him back. I didn't have the family structure when I was little and having a real family means so much to me. I am not a strong Catholic or even in the older generation, but just firmly believe that you do what it takes to keep your family together. This man has a split personality. It's like Dr. Jeykl and Mr. Hyde.

Recently after years of drama, things changed, everything was great with him. He begin to have a work ethic and was holding down a steady job for more than two years, his checks were always spent on us, he was so good to me, he was actually everything I dreamed of in a man. Until his other "personality" came out. I recently found out he is talking through the internet to a lady that he previously cheated on me with, from another state when we lived there.

He is playing with this lady's emotions making promises and telling her he is a single parent and raising his children and he is basically Mr. Wonderful and available, telling her he will be coming to see her soon, etc.

I was hurt by this, but yet I never fully put my guard down and trusted him so I guess I kind of half expected it. When I confronted him he told me it is a game- it's the internet - why be upset it's not like he was with her. I totally think this is wrong and if the shoe were on the other foot no way would it be acceptable.

But yet I have no intentions of leaving him- if I did he would not support our children and I feel he should share that responsibility with me. As I said things were good so I did start to drop my guard and I thought it was finally paying off for all that I endured.

Up until about the last year, I always looked at it as a relationship where I love him but I am no longer in love with him due to all the hurt that he has caused me. I was able to live this way with him on a daily basis and raise our children.

And now after my discovery, I have decided it will go back to being this way again. I have enough to keep busy with, I have a demanding job and several children who keep me busy. I am not looking to find a man, I'm content with my life, but I guess I yearn for that whole family picture, the real mom, the real dad, and their kids. I know the issues he has are with himself and he has very low self esteem. I am successful and attractive and could be with someone if I wanted but as I said I'm not looking for anyone. I know that no matter what I do he will always need that extra attention and he loves drama.

What do you see for me in the future, will I be able to live with him and just be content to raise our family and not have a relationship with him except to raise our children or will I become miserable and bitter towards him?

Where am I going?

Dear Where am I going:

There must be a country western song that tells this story. Do you want to be a country song? I am glad that you have learned to live your life in accordance with your personal goals and that you have learned so much about who you are.

The questions about this relationship that I will ask you to consider are these: How fulfilling is it for you to be in a relationship that is not in alignment with your own spiritual and moral ethics?

Is it good for your children to see a woman who is weak and complies to keep the peace at any and all expense? Does it teach your children that this path is the best for everyone - including them in the future?

The Ozzie and Harriett approach to life, the perfect home setting, the family dinners, the loving and respectful partnership are important ingredients in our internal dreams. They cannot be created by one partner, it takes two.

You will eventually leave him. You will eventually get tired of not trusting him. I know this much about life: the one you choose as a mate must be trusted completely, even with your life. Do you trust this man with your life? Would be take good care of you if you were not well established with a good income?

Internal self-honesty isn't always pleasant. Be truthful. Your life is about you. Your experience. Your right to joy. Your peace. The quality of your life is dependent upon your choices. You are a Spirit in human clothes. You must honor your life. Treat yourself well.

Your mate is wrong. Infidelity is infidelity. Telling a woman he is single is not only disrespectful of you and your children, it is downright awful. He is playing with another woman's feelings, and he is creating an opportunity to be unfaithful. That is a jerky thing to do.

Good luck. I am not too worried about you. I know, that in time, you will make the right decisions to lead a good and wonderfully self-fulfilled life.

Dear Anna,

Just wanted to have the pleasure of saying hello to you as I have written a couple of times to you recently and you actually published my letters.

The letters that I wrote to you asked for a few things that you gave to me and maybe you didn't know you gave me but,

1. Consolation - to help me find consolation for those things from the past that I wondered about and you let me know that I have my Spiritual Companion by my side and she is with me wherever I go.

2. You helped me to validate myself by making myself see that I can trust my own feelings and if it goes against someone else's feelings that it is still okay because I am a valuable person and need to be treated with respect. You made me see that I "can" trust my inner instincts and that after everything is said and done, that I will still come out strong and happy.

Anna, the results of keeping myself from negative, parasitic people has given me a freer sense to be who I want and need to be.

I am becoming happier and I realize that I have given my energy and in a sense my power to someone who did not value me as a person and who at the same time maybe even envied who I am, what I stand for and, whatever I have.

I wish that more women would feel that feeling of empowerment that comes over you when you break-away from people who only want to hold you back to use you for their own selfish purposes.

I also learned a huge lesson on

3. Forgiveness. I have forgiven the man who has hurt me in the past and, have happily let go. But, I also asked for forgiveness from the man that I truly have always needed love from and that was my own father. I had not spoken to him in many years and I accept responsibility for this rift. And even if, we cannot or don't have the relationship I wished to have with him, I feel so much better, more humble and freer since I let go of a lot of negative feelings too.

Anna, will I be successful at finally living the life that my Creator has wanted me to? Will I ever find out what my purpose in life is?

Anna, thanks so much for giving me the answers and the advice that I needed to see, and slowly accept those things that I could not and would not change.

I know what I don't want in my life and I am beginning to see myself again, the way I was and really am. I am starting to recognize myself again.

For those women out there who are in relationships that are painful, I know that it is very hard and painful…especially scary to think of facing life alone but, keep praying that God send you the strength to really see and the strength to get away.

Thanks Anna

Dear Thanks Anna:

You are welcome. I am elated and feel privileged to have helped you find your own power. Yes, you are already living the life that the Creator has in his heart for you - one of joy and fulfillment. And, yes, you will find your purpose, everyday, in any way you help others. Your letter alone, may have changed the life of just one woman or one man. Think of that. Blessings and love to you my dear one.

Dear Anna,

I just wanted to write, because there are some issues I am dealing with that are hard to take. The husband still treats me second best, I want to get a divorce, can't figure out what's holding me back. I'm angry at him most of the time. I wonder why am I so lonely, when I'm married. I'm not getting what I want out of it anymore.

He treats others better than me. I know I have said some mean things to him, but all I want is an apology, and I want him to love me more, but I just don't feel it. It makes me wonder if he's been faithful.

He's older than me, I see him as cold, set in his ways, in return I see myself not even being able to cry anymore, maybe I am angry enough to make this change in my life. I have however met a friend we have talked a few times, but I can't bring myself to go any further with this new friend. I want to be happy, I think every woman yearns for that in love all over feeling.

I'm married ,unhappy, want to go with my new friend, even if it is just out for an evening. Do I get a divorce first or should I just go with it and journey into this new friendship. This new guy is good looking, independent, from what I know he seems to be a good man. I really need to make a decision, before it's too late.

Sincerely Confused Woman

Dear Confused:

Another man will not fix what is unhappy in your life. You have to fix it, then see about another relationship - when you are emotionally stable and independently strong. Sometimes marriages need intervention.

In your case I see that marriage counseling would really help. The problem between you and your husband is communication. There are lots of ways to communicate, and the tools that you are both used to using are destructive ones: yelling, name-calling, sarcasm, belittlement and stony silence (or disapproval). Tell your husband that you are feeling unloved and want your relationship to be balanced, or over. Tell him you want to try counseling. If he refuses, then you have your answer, and seek separation.

He may not take you seriously until he sees action; then he may consent to counseling. It is not fun nor healthy to be stuck in an unfriendly environment.

In the meantime, if you chose to pursue a relationship with the guy who seems to be nicer, remember, the guilt you feel will be your own so don't throw it back at your husband, torture him, wait for his nasty response to being tortured, and then use that to justify your affair.

Life is complicated, do yourself a favor, and try to keep it simple. Try not to cause yourself embarrassment, because you will get caught. The embarrassment is not worth the few moments comfort with someone who is basically a stranger.

Blessings.

Where is Heaven

Our Grandma, Dora No Neck, Under Baggage went to Heaven on December 19, 2006. But we need her today. Our hearts hurt and we cry, We need her right away. Can someone tell us? How to find her?

Where is Heaven? We don't even know where to look. We know her children, Adele, Karen, Vernal, Reg and Twila need her too, We see them cry and hear them call her name, but we can't help them find her.

Maybe if we phone her, she will hurry home to us. Is Heaven very far away? Grandma, has been gone too long. She really needs to come home now. We really need to reach her, But we don't know how. Can someone help us find the number please? Is it listed under Heaven?

If we call Grandma Cordee, maybe she will know, Grandma, said when we need help, We should go to Church. We found Grandma Cordee's phone number, Tacked upon Grandma's bedroom wall. We'll give her a call.

My brother, you showed me a lot of things, I learned a lot I didn't know but you forgot to teach me one last thing how to let you go, I know you didn't mean to leave me, sometimes we have no choice, I miss being your little sister hearing my name called by your voice, I wish I got to say "I Love You" before you were giving to the sky, if God could grant me one last wish, I'd ask to say 'goodbye', you've always meant a lot to me, I could never love you less I know it's true when they say 'he only takes the best', Love your sister Tiara Lays hard.

Language ties, binds and provides foundation for history, culture, values

Alive or dead, do we have a plan?

(Editor's note The following is the second of a series of articles on the Lakota language and what is needed to keep it alive for the future generations.)

By Tom Crash
Times Correspondent

LAKOTA NATION - "A benchmark of sovereignty is the ability to speak our own language," said Mike Her Many Horses, a past OST council representative and tribal historian, "so we erode our sovereignty when we do not speak our own language - there is plenty of historical and cultural materials out there, next to the Navajo and the Hopi, Lakota are the most studied tribe in the country but we need the tribal government to set this as a priority of the tribe and provide the necessary resources to our educators to teach the language at all levels."

A number of people have commented over the last several months that it's not a crisis, that the language will always be here but two recent activities have helped to define some of the problems across Lakota country.

Through an ANA grant, Pete and Cindy Catches surveyed close to 9,000 people living in communities across Pine Ridge Reservation and found that less than five per cent of children under the age of 17 speak Lakota.

The Catches found that many communities were assuming that the numbers were not that bad that

Tribal supreme court rules in favor of RST to recover $399,353

ROSEBUD - Tribal supreme court judge, B. J. Jones granted an appeal by the Rosebud Sioux Tribe in August in a case in which RST sought to recover $399, 353.61 from BBC Entertainment.

The management company was initially hired to operate the Rosebud Casino in 1994 and it was working under a five year contract. Attorney Dana Hanna who represented the tribe in 2001 in tribal court said that the company paid itself more than it should have. BBC which once stood for Boyd, Boyd and Colombe was supposed to receive 35 percent of the profits, but instead, took 65 percent from a reserve account.

Former RST tribal president, Charles Colombe, recently ran for vice-president of the Rosebud Sioux tribe, however, his bid to be the next RST vice-president was unsuccessful.

Current RST vice-president, Louis Wayne Boyd ran for the office of tribal president and was also defeated.

Boyd has not been connected to BBC Entertainment since 1996 and is not liable for the amount awarded to RST by Judge Jones.

Current RST president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, was re-elected for a second term and was quoted in the Rapid City Journal as saying that the recovered funds will help to meet a variety of expenses at the Rosebud Casino including a new seal on the parking lot and improvements in the building's heating and cooling systems, and new slot machines.

Judge B. J. Jones presides over the Sisseton-Wahpeton tribal court and was appointed to hear the case by the tribal supreme court.

Attorney Hanna who previously served as the RST attorney general opened a law office in Rapid City. He has been successful in representing local clients on the Rosebud, including a couple of cases against the Todd County Schools and the Winner School district.

In the latter case, he collaborated with the ACLU in a case brought by Native parents.

Bordeaux is re-elected for a second term as RST president

ROSEBUD - Incumbent Rosebud Sioux tribal president, Rodney M. Bordeaux, retained his seat in the RST general election voting on October 25. The 21 voting districts also resulted in former RST chairman, William "Willie" Kindle being elected as RST vice-president over former RST chairman, Charles Colombe by a margin of almost 200 votes cast.

According to the RST election code, section 801 A the voting results must be posted on the Monday following the election and qualified voters have until the following Friday to challenge voting results.

The challenge must be accompanied by a fee of $50.00 and the election board will determine if the challenge warrants a hearing. If the board then hears the complaint it will then issue a written order of memorandum and provide reasons for upholding or dismissing the contest of election. The decision of the election board is considered final.

The recent RST election was historic as the election process will change in two years. The RST secretarial election this past summer resulted in several amendments to the constitution which will put term limits in place and required staggered terms for council representatives. RST constitutional officers will also be elected by the people at that time.

List of candidates with voting results:

Office of tribal president: Rodney M. Bordeaux 1,621, Louis "Wayne" Boyd 1,495.

Tribal judge issue ruling, N.E.A.G. to be excluded from Pine Ridge

By Natalie Hand
Special to the Times

PINE RIDGE - On Oct. 29, OST Chief Judge Lisa Adams issued an exclusion order to remove the Native American Energy Group from the Pine Ridge reservation, declaring that the company has been trespassing on tribal lands. The finding gave NAEG 30 days to vacate the reservation.

Adams also noted that N.A.E.G. ignored a tribal resolution that accepted the OST Environmental Technical Team's recommendation that the Tribe not enter into any working relationship with N.A.E.G. Further, the order stated that Eileen Janis, OST member, failed to inform N.A.E.G. about OST ordinances prohibiting exploration and mining for uranium.

Plaintiffs in the case, Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council (Oglala Delegation) and Owe Aku, were pleased with the exclusion order. "Judge Adams showed great respect for the Treaty Council during this hearing. However, we must update the language in our outdated Tribal Law and Order Code to combat new mining and exploration techniques. N.A.E.G. is gone, but they could try and return in another form and there are many other companies out there that will try to bribe their way onto our homeland," stated Floyd Hand, Treaty Council delegate.

N.A.E.G., a New York-based oil/gas/mining company, approached OST tribal officials in early 2007 with a written proposal to embark on a multi-phase plan to mine uranium on the reservation. Once this proposal was disclosed to the public, tribal members expressed outrage that a mining company had been on the reservation for so many months without following protocol. The treaty council, along with Owe Aku, a non-profit environmental activism group, took action and filed a motion in early September, to exclude the company from Pine Ridge.

"The Pine Ridge Reservation and 1868 Ft Laramie Treaty Territory has been declared a nuclear free zone by both the Tribal Government and the Treaty Council. The court action brought by Owe Aku and the Treaty Council to stop this

Janis found guilty of stealing money

RAPID CITY (AP) - A former Oglala Sioux Tribe vice president was convicted last Thursday of stealing money from the tribe in 2004.

Eileen Janis was found guilty of one count of theft from a tribal organization.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Mara Kohn said Janis became involved in a "financial snowball" after she started using cash advances available to tribal employees.

Kohn said OST employees are allowed to take payroll advances, which Janis did, but that Janis got in way over her head with spending.

Kohn said Janis owes the tribe more than $22,000.

U.S. District Judge Karen E. Schreier presided over the trial.

Janis faces a maximum sentence of five years in prison and up to $250,000 in fines when she is sentenced Jan. 28.

many more of our children were speaking than really are.

Wil Meya helped to form the Lakota Language Consortium which now has produced a series of curriculum materials for use in schools across Lakota country.

When a school takes the curriculum materials, the Consortium provides assessment, a pre-test and a post-test and teacher training. Last month, the group completed a pre-test to 5,000 children in 35 schools.

The test was 20 questions with four pictures written for the second grade level of a seven year old.

Meya said the results were scary, only a small handful, most of that handful was in high school, and overall 95 per cent of the children finished at less than 50 per cent of knowing the words.

"The pre-test gives us an idea where the children are at, sets a baseline and allows teachers and administrators to set goals," said Meya, "teacher training has to be a priority, we sometimes get to work with teachers for maybe three days when we really could use three weeks to help prepare the teachers in language instruction; Sitting Bull College worked out a three credit class we did in three weeks."

A total of 35 schools have committed to using the Consortium materials with some schools purchasing enough so each student has a book, Level I was in the schools in 2004, Level II hit the schools in late 2005 or early 2006, Level III is scheduled to be out in September of 2008 with a new dictionary set for distribution in January of 2008.

"If teachers follow the guide to the letter, it'll work," said Meya, "where teachers are good, there is success, where there is stability in the administration and support, there is success; there are huge differences between schools and sometimes even classrooms but overall I have found many children, all ages who are really excited about learning the Lakota language."

Meya describes Les Ducheneaux, a teacher at Tiospaya Topa on Cheyenne River as one of the best Lakota language teachers, he just has had great success teaching the language. Ducheneaux swears that success came after he started using the Consortium materials.

"The curriculum materials are fantastic, the kids really benefit from them and they seem to learn it faster," said Robert Two Crow, Lakota Studies and Technology department director for Shannon County Schools, "I don't see the materials as the core though, I see them in a supportive role, their materials, the training and assessment pieces are all helpful and will help turn the situation around but in a school system the model where you have students receiving 30-40 minutes of instruction per week, that doesn't work, if they are going to grasp a language, they need 720-30 hours to get it. We might have a commitment to the language but not the model on how to do it - how do we get the kids to use it outside the classroom in the community or in their daily life?"

There is technology today that has been developed to help teach languages, Rosetta Stone has developed very successful software for a number of languages.

It costs about $200,000 to develop the software for a language and every other year they try to pick a language and do it pro bono; the only native language they chose was from a small tribe in Louisiana.

According to Dr. Archie Beauvais, director of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's language preservation office, they have postponed this year's selection until sometime in 2008.

"It probably costs about $200,000 to send a group of people to Rapid City for a weekend training," said Her Many Horses, "we choose to ignore the issue and think it is someone else's responsibility, if several tribal casinos chipped in we could have the technology developed rather quickly."

There are a number of individuals and groups that are trying to deal with the issue including: Leonard Little Finger, past service unit director of the local Indian Health Service hospital in Pine Ridge and Lakota Studies director for Loneman School has been working on a language immersion school in Oglala.

"We are in the construction stage still," said Little Finger, "we hope to open in the fall of 2008 with 15-20 students, five to eight year olds, boys and girls. The home is not working to continue the language, we want to teach it so that our youth think in the Lakota language not translate it from English to Lakota or back."

This is the second year for Oglala Lakota College to operate the Pine Ridge Reservation Headstart program with 26 headstart centers and five early headstart centers on the reservation.

This year they have turned one of the headstart centers in Porcupine into an immersion classroom and if successful they hope to add one or two classrooms next year.

So, it is not an easy subject, there are some initiatives in place today but is it enough?

Where is the leadership?

Where do the tribes stand, the tribal colleges or the treaty groups?

The series will continue.

company from desecrating our sacred Mother Earth has been decided in our favor. It has been a challenging experience to fight an energy company, but worth the effort to protect our Treaty Territory. Companies who come to our land need to come with full disclosure of their intentions to do business with our people, our leaders need to enforce such a policy so we are not faced with a similar situation in the future," said Debra White Plume of Owe Aku.

MISSION/PINE RIDGE - With the number two seed in the region, Red Cloud hosted the first round playoff game with Stanley County on Tuesday; the Crusaders marched down the field on their first offensive series, got stalled on the Buffalo 15 yard line, lost five more yards on a penalty and lined up for a field goal on fourth and long - Jesse Arthur faked the kick and hit Carl Swallow in the end zone for a touchdown and it seemed to be a good start in the first round of the playoffs. The TD pass was called back because of an illegal procedure penalty, after an incomplete pass and turning the ball over on downs, Stanley County marched down the field with an 80 yard drive and scored on a five yard quarterback keeper to go up 6-0, a lead they never relinquished on the way to a 12-0 win.

"We just couldn't get our offense going after that first series," said Keith Ferguson, wrapping up his first year as head coach for Red Cloud, "they played smash mouth defense and we just couldn't find any rhythm."

Red Cloud picked up three first downs on that opening drive and only one more first down the rest of the game on a 15 yard penalty in the second half. Stanley County scored their second touchdown on a three yard quarterback keeper with five minutes to go in the game.

Jeremy Blacksmith, Red Cloud's sophomore quarterback, finished with three completions out of 10 attempts, for 30 yards and four interceptions while Billy Scott, seeing limited playing time because of an ankle injury carried the ball ten times for 26 yards.

In the last game of the regular season, Red Cloud scored two touchdowns in the last two and a half minutes to earn a come from behind 12-8 road win over Todd County, their seventh win in a row.

"This team seemed to progress each week, they found a number of different ways to win," said Ferguson, "they showed real heart in the Todd County game with Art Vitalis coming up with a key punt return and Blacksmith keeping his head on a broken play to come up with a big completion for his first of two touchdown passes."

After a knock down drag them out scoreless first three quarters, the Falcons scored on a Canku One Star two yard run and followed it up with a Mike Neiss two point conversion for an 8-0 lead half way through the fourth. With a little over two minutes left in the game, Blacksmith dropped the ball after getting the snap, looked up and saw the planned play was no longer possible, saw Mike Cuny open in the middle of the field, hit him with a pass and watched Cuny break one tackle and score on a 61 yard pass play. Red Cloud's two point conversion failed and the Crusaders were still down 8-6.

After recovering the kickoff, Red Cloud turned the ball over on downs and Todd County tried to run out the clock. The Falcons had to kick a punt, Vitalis ran it back 40 yards and it took two passes, the second one a 14 yarder to Christian McGhee with seven seconds left for Red Cloud to gain a 12-8 win over Todd County. The win gave Red Cloud seven in a row and the All Nations conference crown.

Vitalis, subbing for the injured Scott, finished with 19 carries for 118 yards in his first game as a running back while Blacksmith was four of eight for 103 yards and two touchdowns.

Red Cloud finished the season 7-2, their best record in over ten years.
